Show to feature vehicle chase from last summer

By BECKY KARK

PAW PAW — Last August, Van Buren County Sheriff Daniel Abbott chased down and captured a man suspected of assaulting his girlfriend, starting her car on fire, fleeing from police and then pointing a gun at them.

On Wednesday, TV viewers across the country will get to see the dash cam video for themselves on a new episode of "Live PD presents PD Cam." The show airs from 8-9 p.m. on A&E channel.

ABBOTT

"The pursuit I was involved in in August went viral and they saw it," Abbott said in an interview in November, when he was asked to be featured on the show. "I was humbled and honored. I never do my job for recognition, so it's an honor when someone wants to put you in the spotlight for a job well done." The incident unfolded in the early morning hours of Friday, Aug. 16 in Bangor when James Ochoa-Rodriguez, 32, allegedly assaulted his girlfriend, started her van on fire, then fled the scene.

South Haven Police officers tracked the suspect's vehicle and tried to stop it. However, Ochoa-Rodriguez accelerated the vehicle and a pursuit ensued on M-43 Highway. The Van Buren County Sheriff's Department then took over the pursuit, but initially deputies were unable to stop the suspect vehicle.

As the pursuit continued, Ochoa-Rodriguez allegedly called his girlfriend and told her he was going to return and make police shoot him in front of her. It was then that Abbott took the lead in his vehicle and used a pursuit intervention technique maneuver to hit the back side of the suspect's SUV and knock it into a roadside ditch. Police dash-cam video captured Abbott's successful effort at stopping the SUV. But the effort almost went awry when officers surrounded the vehicle and the suspect tried to get away once again by stepping on the accelerator in an effort to get out of the ditch. Police ended up having to use force to get him out of the vehicle and arrest him.

The Van Buren County prosecutor initially charged Rodriguez with four felonies. In December a plea deal was reached with the suspect, who agreed to plead guilty to the felony charge of fleeing and eluding police. The other three charges – two counts of assaulting and obstructing police and one count of assaulting his girlfriend – were dismissed, according to court records. In January Van Buren County Circuit Court Judge Kathleen Brickley sentenced Rodriguez to 14 months in prison for fleeing and eluding police.

State House bill aims to get community involved with what comes after a nuclear power plant closes

By ALEXANDRA NEWMAN • HP Staff Writer

Don Campbell / HP file

The Palisades Nuclear Plant will be decommissioned, starting in 2022.

COVERT — What happens after a nuclear power plant closes?

A bill introduced by state Rep. Jon Hoadley, D-Kalamazoo, in the Michigan House of Representatives last month aims to get more people involved in answering that question, especially with the closure of Palisades nuclear power plant looming in 2022.

House Bill 5377 would create a Nuclear Decommissioning Citizens Advisory Panel (NDCAP) of Michigan residents and others to advise the governor, legislature, state agencies, and the general public on issues surrounding the decommissioning process.

"Workers and the community should have a voice when something as big as a nuclear plant goes offline," Hoadley said in a recent phone interview. "Once they've made the decision to turn off the power plant, it can take decades to complete decommissioning. People have worked in the plant, and lived in that community for years. They should have a say in what happens next."

Here and now

Hoadley said he was approached about introducing such a bill by folks in the community who have been following the conversation around nuclear plant decommissioning for a while.

The timing lined up with the Palisades plant in Covert set for closure in 2022, and the decommissioning to follow, as well as the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission looking to create a report of best practices for community advisory boards associated with nuclear power plants.

Entergy, which owns Palisades and other nuclear power plants around the country, agreed in 2018 to sell Palisades and Pilgrim Nuclear Station in Massachusetts after their shutdowns and reactor defuelings, to a Holtec International subsidiary for accelerated decommissioning.

Holtec will develop a timeline for the decommissioning of Palisades closer to its shutdown, it reported at the time. Pilgrim is set to close this year and all major decommissioning work is expected to be completed in about eight years.

The process of decommissioning a plant can take up to 60 years, per NRC guidelines, and decommissioning activities are strictly regulated by the NRC. Their authority in the process includes oversight and enforcement, regardless of whether the work is being performed by the utility or a contract company.

The NRC, in conjunction with Congress, has been working recently to modernize the nuclear energy industry.

Last January, the Nuclear Energy Innovation and Modernization Act was signed into law. It revises the budget and fee structure of the NRC and requires the NRC to develop new processes for licensing nuclear reactors.

The law also requires the NRC to hold public meetings and submit a report to Congress on best practices for community advisory boards. The NRC held the community meetings throughout last fall, including an August meeting in Benton Harbor.

The report is expected to be released by mid-July.

Massachusetts and Vermont already have nuclear decommissioning citizens advisory panels.

He vaped and now faces life after double lung transplant

By KRISTEN JORDAN SHAMUS
Detroit Free Press

Daniel Ament doesn't shake hands anymore. It's too risky.

His body can't fight the assault of viruses or bacteria that might be passed to him from something as simple as a handshake.

His immune system is practically wiped out, and it's all because of vaping. The habit triggered a cascade of health effects five months ago that led the once athletic teen to the verge of death.

Daniel, a 17-year-old junior at Grosse Pointe North High School, is believed to be the first person in the country to undergo a double lung transplant after irreparably damaging his lungs by vaping nicotine and tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC, the chemical that causes most of marijuana's psychological effects.

"I played varsity sports. I had almost all A's, and my ultimate goal was to become a Navy SEAL in the military," Daniel told a roomful of elementary and middle school students Tuesday at Our Lady Star of the Sea in Grosse Pointe Woods. "I focused a lot on my health and fitness, and due to vaping, I became very ill and all that was taken away."

He showed the students slides of before-and-after pictures of himself.

In the before, they saw an image of Daniel's muscles in a mirror, revealing the torso of a fit, muscular teen. The after picture exposed his dramatic transformation to waif-thin boy who will forever bear a wavy scar across his chest.

"I spent 29 days on life support as a 16-year-old and I only had a 10 percent chance of survival," he told them. " ... I lost 50 days of my memory, 40 pounds, and all of my muscles atrophied, which means I basically lost all of my muscles so I couldn't even walk.

"I did not know the consequences. I was not educated, and it was a stupid decision. So that's why I'm here today, to try and show the real consequences that can happen. I did not vape a lot, but something happened to me ..."

DANIEL AMENT

"I did not know the consequences. I was not educated, and it was a stupid decision. So that's why I'm here today, to try and show the real consequences that can happen. I did not vape a lot, but something happened to me" that didn't happen to his friends who also used e-cigarettes.

Daniel got sick at the peak of a national outbreak of vape-related lung injuries that led to 2,711 hospitalizations and 60 deaths. He was among 71 people in Michigan to be sickened during the outbreak, which took the lives of three Michiganders.

Daniel's cautionary tale is one he's sharing publicly now because he wants other kids to understand how dangerous vaping can be and show them how it changed his life so they won't fall into the same trap.

An estimated 5.4 million middle and high school students used e-cigarettes in 2019, according to the the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Social vaping leads to tragedy

Daniel was first introduced to vaping in middle school, he said, when friends started using. But it wasn't until he was a sophomore in high school that he was enticed to try it.

"It was just kind of all around me," he said. "I was curious."

It wasn't long after his 16th birthday in November 2018 that Daniel became a social user, mostly on the weekends.

He spent last summer sailing and swimming at the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club. He had a job at a local restaurant

By THOMAS BEAUMONT and SETH BORENSTEIN
Associated Press

Bryon Houlgrave

Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price speaks to members of the media during a press conference, Friday, in Des Moines, Iowa.

DES MOINES, Iowa — Iowa Democratic Party Chairman Troy Price, under immense pressure following the state's presidential caucus debacle, said Friday that an independent review will determine what caused the problems that led to a dayslong delay in reporting the results, inconsistencies in the numbers and no clear winner.

"We will be undergoing an independent, forensic review," Price told reporters Friday in Des Moines. "What went right? What went wrong? Start to finish."

But almost nothing went right Monday night, first when an app local Democratic volunteers were to use to report the results from almost 1,700 precincts failed, and then when a massive backlog of phone reports and inquiries followed. It brought the reporting of the results of the leadoff presidential nominating contest to a standstill.

It took until Thursday for the state party, which operates the series of statewide political meetings, to issue what it said are complete results.

In those figures, former South Bend, Indiana, Mayor Pete Buttigieg leads Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders by two state delegate equivalents out of 2,152 counted. That is a margin of 0.09 percentage points.

The Associated Press said Thursday it is unable to declare a winner based on the available information. The results as reported by the Iowa Democratic Party, the AP believes, may not be fully accurate.

Price also announced he was extending until Monday the deadline for presidential candidates to request a review of the results of the Iowa presidential caucuses and was allowing campaigns to submit their own data for comparison by noon Saturday. The original date for presidential candidates to request a review of the results was midday Friday.

Nonetheless, Price said the state party would be allocating the national delegates won in Monday's contest over the weekend.

Price also revealed, when asked by reporters, that he had not tested the app himself. "I did not, but our team did," he said.

The breakdown in Iowa also exposed a rift between the state party and the Democratic National Committee, whose chairman, Tom Perez, asked the Iowa party to conduct a recanvass.

However, by party rules, only the candidates are allowed to request such a process.

Buttigieg campaign spokesman Chris Meagher told the AP in a text message that the campaign would not be requesting a recanvass of the Iowa results. Sanders' campaign officials did not immediately reply to a request for comment on a recanvass.

Buttigieg leaves Iowa with at least a tie for the most delegates to the party's national convention, regardless of which candidate eventually wins the Iowa Democratic caucuses. That's because his support was more consistent across the state than Sanders'. For example, Buttigieg won the most state delegate equivalents in three of Iowa's four congressional districts. Sanders came in first in the other congressional district.

Buttigieg has won 13 national delegates in Iowa while Bernie Sanders has won 12, with one final delegate left undecided, according to the AP's delegate count. The last delegate will go to the winner, meaning Buttigieg can do no worse than finish in a tie for the lead as the race for the party's nomination for president moves on to New Hampshire.

By TALI ARBEL
AP Technology Writer

NEW YORK — Trump administration officials, increasingly intent on preventing Chinese global technological domination, keep floating the idea that the U.S. government should take a more direct hand in running next-generation 5G wireless networks.

But the notion isn't terribly popular – not even within the administration.

On Thursday, Attorney General William Barr said the U.S. government should consider taking a " controlling stake " in the European companies Nokia and Ericsson to thwart the global ambitions of China-based Huawei, which holds a leading share of the market for 5G wireless equipment. The federal government could do so directly or via a consortium of U.S. companies and private investors, Barr said.

The backlash didn't take long. In an interview on CNBC Friday, Vice President Mike Pence said "the best way forward" on 5G relies on private enterprise, not government takeovers. The Federal Communications Commission, which regulates the nation's airwaves, already plans to auction off additional radio spectrum for 5G.

"That's the plan the president has endorsed," Pence said. Later on Friday, Trump economic adviser Larry Kudlow also argued against the idea, telling reporters at the White House that "the U.S. government is not in the business of buying companies, whether they're domestic or foreign."

Trump has not tweeted about the proposal.

Depending on how you count it, Barr's speech is the second or third time people in Trump's administration or 2020 campaign have suggested direct federal involvement in 5G networks, which boast faster speeds and promise a variety of new applications. Barr suggested in his speech that 5G speeds will turn wireless networks into "the central nervous system of the next generation of internet, called the 'Industrial Internet,'" with potentially dramatic economic consequences.

Army Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Vindman, a military officer at the National Security Council who testified during the impeachment hearings on Capitol Hill, lower right, walks down the steps of the Eisenhower Executive Office Building on the White House complex in Washington on Monday.

Payback: Trump ousts officials who testified on impeachment

By DEB RIECHMANN and COLLEEN LONG
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Exacting swift punishment against those who crossed him, an emboldened President Donald Trump on Friday ousted two government officials who had delivered damaging testimony against him during his impeachment hearings. The president took retribution just two days after his acquittal by the Senate.

First came news that Trump had ousted Lt. Col Alexander Vindman, the decorated soldier and national security aide who played a central role in the Democrats' impeachment case. He was escorted out of the White House complex Friday, according to his lawyer, who said he was asked to leave in retaliation for "telling the truth."

"The truth has cost Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman his job, his career, and his privacy," David Pressman, an attorney for Vindman, said in a statement. The Army said in a statement that Vindman and his twin brother, Lt. Col. Yevgeny Vindman, who also was asked to leave his job as a White House lawyer on Friday, had been reassigned to the Army.

Next came word that Gordon Sondland, Trump's ambassador to the European Union, also was out.

"I was advised today that the President intends to recall me effective immediately as United States Ambassador to the European Union," Sondland said in a statement.

The White House had not been coy about whether Trump would retaliate against those he viewed as foes in the impeachment drama. White House press secretary Stephanie Grisham said Thursday that Trump was glad it was over and "maybe people should pay for that."

Sondland was a crucial witness in the House impeachment inquiry, telling investigators that "Everyone was in the loop" on Trump's desire to press Ukraine for politically charged investigations. He told lawmakers how he came to understand that there was a "quid pro quo" connecting a desired White House visit for Ukraine's leader and an announcement that the country would conduct the investigations the president wanted.

Alexander Vindman's lawyer issued a one-page statement that accused Trump of taking revenge on his client.

"He did what any member of our military is charged with doing every day: he followed orders, he obeyed his oath, and he served his country, even when doing so was fraught with danger and personal peril," Pressman said. "And for that, the most powerful man in the world – buoyed by the silent, the pliable, and the complicit – has decided to exact revenge."

The White House did not respond to Pressman's accusation.

"We do not comment on personnel matters," said John Ullyot, spokesman for the National Security Council, the foreign policy arm of the White House where Vindman was an expert on Ukraine.

Vindman's status had been uncertain since he testified that he didn't think it was "proper" for Trump to "demand that a foreign government investigate" former Vice President Joe Biden and his son's dealings with the energy company Burisma in Ukraine. Vindman's ouster, however, seemed imminent after Trump mocked him Thursday during his post-acquittal celebration with Republican supporters in the East Room and said Friday that he was not happy with him.

"You think I'm supposed to be happy with him?" Trump told reporters on the South Lawn of the White House. "I'm not. ... They are going to be making that decision."

Vindman, a 20-year Army veteran, wore his uniform full of medals, including a purple heart, when he appeared late last year for what turned out to be a testy televised impeachment hearing. Trump supporters raised questions about the immigrant's allegiance to the United States – his parents fled the Soviet Union when he was a child —and noted that he had received offers to work for the government of Ukraine, offers Vindman said he swiftly dismissed.

"I am an American," he stated emphatically.

Trump backers cheered Vindman's removal, while Democrats were aghast.

"The White House is running a two for one special today on deep state leakers," Rep. Paul Gosar, an Arizona Republican, wrote on Twitter.

A Twitter account used by the president's reelection campaign, @Trump WarRoom, claimed Vindman leaked information to the whistleblower whose complaint about Trump's call ignited the investigation, and "colluded with Democrats to start the partisan impeachment coup."

Former Trump NSC official Tim Morrison testified that others had brought concerns that Vindman may have leaked something. Vindman, in his own congressional testimony, denied leaking any information.

Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer said the firing was another example of how the "White House runs away from the truth."

"Lt. Col. Vindman lived up to his oath to protect and defend our Constitution," Schumer said in a statement. "This action is not a sign of strength. It only shows President Trump's weakness."

Hillary Clinton, the 2016 Democratic presidential nominee, recalled how Vindman said in testimony before the House impeachment panel that he had reassured his worried father that he would be "fine for telling the truth."

"It's appalling that this administration may prove him wrong," Clinton said in a tweet.

At last fall's hearing, when the senior Republican on the House Intelligence Committee, Rep. Devin Nunes, addressed him as "Mr. Vindman," the Iraq War veteran replied, "Ranking member, it's Lt. Col. Vindman please."

Defense Secretary Mark Esper was asked what the Pentagon would do to ensure that Vindman faces no retribution. "We protect all of our service members from retribution or anything like that," Esper said. "We've already addressed that in policy and other means."

Alexander Vindman is scheduled to enter a military college in Washington, D.C., this summer, and his brother is to be assigned to the Army General Counsel's Office, according to two officials who were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly and so spoke on condition of anonymity.

Pressman said Vindman was among a handful of men and women who courageously "put their faith in country ahead of fear" but have "paid a price."

"There is no question in the mind of any American why this man's job is over, why this country now has one less soldier serving it at the White House," Pressman said. "Lt. Col. Vindman was asked to leave for telling the truth. His honor, his commitment to right, frightened the powerful."

Bolton reviewing letter from White House about manuscript

Former national security adviser John Bolton's team on Friday accused the White House of trying to suppress his unpublished book after word surfaced that the National Security Council had sent him a letter expressing concerns that the manuscript contained classified information.

The White House has been scrutinizing Bolton's book, which is due out next month, for classified materials as part of a standard pre-publication review process.

Sarah Tinsley, a senior adviser to Bolton, issued a statement Friday acknowledging that a letter from the NSC had been sent to Chuck Cooper, Bolton's lawyer. News that the letter had been sent had started circulating in Washington earlier in the day.

"This latest leak from the NSC's pre-publication review process raises even more serious concerns that the process has been thoroughly breached, and that it is more about suppressing Ambassador Bolton's book than about classification issues," Tinsley said.

She said Bolton was reviewing the letter and would respond. She said Bolton continues to believe "that the manuscript contains no legitimately classified material."

Healthy U.S. job market: How big a political edge for Trump?

By CHRISTOPHER RUGABER
AP Economics Writer

Lynne Sladky / AP

Gory Rodriguez, of Starbucks, right, interviews a job applicant during a job fair at Dolphin Mall in Miami in 2019.

WASHINGTON — U.S. hiring jumped last month, and many more people were encouraged to look for work, showing that the economy remains robust despite threats from China's viral outbreak, an ongoing trade war and struggles at Boeing.

The strong job growth gives President Donald Trump more evidence for his assertion that the economy is flourishing under his watch. It may also complicate the argument his Democratic presidential rivals are making that the economy isn't benefiting everyday Americans.

The Labor Department said Friday that employers added a robust 225,000 jobs in January. At the same time, a half-million Americans, feeling better about their job prospects, streamed into the job market. Most found jobs. But those that didn't were newly counted as unemployed, and their numbers raised the jobless rate to 3.6 percent from December's half-century low of 3.5 percent.

Seven Democratic presidential candidates were to debate later Friday in New Hampshire. Leading contenders, notably Sens. Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren, have built campaigns around the argument that the middle class has been mostly left out of an economic expansion that has disproportionately served the wealthy.

The outcome of the presidential race could hinge in part on whether enough voters agree that inequality and rising costs for services such as health care, housing and college education outweigh the benefits from nearly 11 years of economic growth.

"Democratic primary voters are very open to messages about the economy doing badly," said Jason Furman, a top economic adviser to former President Barack Obama, said.

Furman added, though, "I don't know that that would be consistent for the electorate as a whole."

As the election intensifies, views of the economy remain broadly polarized. According to a Pew Research Center survey released Friday, 81 percent of Republicans and Republican-leaning independents say the economy is excellent or good. Only 39 percent of Democrats and those leaning Democratic say so.

The public overall, Pew notes, holds a more positive view of the economy than at any point in the past 20 years. Fifty-seven percent say they think it is excellent or good, up from 32 percent in 2016.

Trump and his team can point to several positive trends in Friday's jobs report, though his Democratic opponents can cite some evidence for their contrasting views, too.

Robust hiring has picked up from earlier this year, when the trade war with China raged, and is helping remedy one of the economy's key weaknesses: Even as the unemployment rate fell from a peak of 10 percent in 2009, millions of Americans were discouraged about finding a job and stopped looking for one. Some returned to school or stayed home to care for relatives.

Yet that trend has nearly reversed itself since 2016. The proportion of Americans in their prime working years – ages 25 through 54 – who either have a job or are looking for one has reached its highest point since September 2008, just before the recession intensified. Economists typically focus on the prime-age population because it filters out the effects of retirement among the vast baby boomer generation.

Trump officials are also stressing that the job market is now benefiting a wider range of demographic groups.

"We have seen Hispanics, African Americans, Asians, young people, women – all ... are either at their all-time employment lows or very nearly so," Larry Kudlow, the White House's top economic adviser, said Friday.

Trump has also been touting a "blue collar boom," though the evidence for that is mixed. Manufacturers lost jobs in January for the third time in four months. The employment report shows that if there is such a boom, it is among construction and transportation and warehouse workers, who accounted for nearly one-third of last month's hiring. These jobs often pay less than factory jobs of the past.

Wages are also a mixed bag. Hourly pay rose 3.1 percent in January from a year earlier, a decent pace but below a peak of 3.5 percent reached last summer. The last time the unemployment rate fell below 4 percent, in the late 1990s, wages were rising much faster – about 4.5 percent annually.

VAPE

busing tables and delivering food. But when a friend left his Juul device in Daniel's car, he said he started using it almost every day.

He got the nicotine juice pods and THC cartridges from friends who'd bought them from stores and marijuana dispensaries in the Grosse Pointe area.

"They could get it from any store around here," Daniel said, adding that it was rare when a store clerk would ask kids for identification to prove they were at least 18. "Like, no one really cards."

He vaped THC about 10 times before he got sick, he said, adding that doctors haven't been able to pinpoint specifically which product caused his illness.

"They don't know, but I'm kinda guessing it was one of the THC ones I hit. ... I'm guessing one of them was tainted somehow, or had a specific chemical. But I also am open to the fact that it could have been nicotine-based because I was vaping nicotine about nine months, sometimes every day. But with THC, I was only vaping a little over 10 times, and one hit, maybe two hits each time. The THC vapes are really potent, and they deliver it so well that one hit will affect you for a long time.

"I'm pretty sure all the THC vapes that I did use were from dispensaries," he said, not from black market dealers who may have peddled tainted vape juice. "I was using the same stuff everyone else was using."

When school started in September, he considered trying out for the high school football team. But before he got the chance, Daniel said he started feeling really sick.

"I had a really bad headache, fatigue and like just soreness overall, like my back was really hurting," he said. It was Sept. 3, the second day of school.

His symptoms quickly worsened, and by the next morning, his mother, Tammy Ament, took Daniel to the pediatrician. A chest X-ray didn't show anything unusual, she said, so she brought him home to rest.

"Within six hours, he wasn't able to breathe very well," she said. "So I took him to the ER at 6 p.m."

On the way to the hospital, Daniel told her that he'd been vaping.

"Well, maybe a little bit," she said he told her. He agreed to be honest with doctors.

"You know, that probably saved his life, just letting them know the truth," Tammy Ament said. "It did take a while to figure out because I don't think they actually thought it was from vaping at first."

A rapid decline

On the same day Daniel's mom drove him to the hospital, Gov. Gretchen Whitmer announced a first-in-the-nation temporary ban on the sale of flavored vape products in the state, declaring the spate of vape-related illness a public health emergency. But the ban, which didn't take effect until October, eventually was halted through court appeals.

In January, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services announced new regulations that will pull from the market flavored e-cigarette cartridge-based pods and cartridges in fruit, dessert and mint flavors, which, it says, are popular among teens.

"The United States has never seen an epidemic of substance use arise as quickly as our current epidemic of youth use of e-cigarettes," said HHS Secretary Alex Azar in a statement announcing the restrictions. "By prioritizing enforcement against the products that are most widely used by children, our action today seeks to strike the right public health balance by maintaining e-cigarettes as a potential off-ramp for adults using combustible tobacco while ensuring these products don't provide an on-ramp to nicotine addiction for our youth. We will not stand idly by as this crisis among America's youth grows and evolves, and we will continue monitoring the situation and take further actions as necessary."

But the regulations came too late for Daniel.

Daniel doesn't remember much after he arrived at the hospital.

"I remember they were asking me questions like about what I had used," he said. "So I told them everything I used as soon as I could because I knew it could be really serious. ... I had heard about this stuff on the news. I came out with all my use like right away.

"And I just remember the doctor said nothing showed up in the X-ray. But then, they wanted to take a CAT scan, but I don't remember taking the CAT scan."

His mother explained that Daniel needed supplemental oxygen at first. But he quickly began to need more and more. Then, his health deteriorated enough that Daniel was put on a ventilator. Soon after that, doctors told Tammy Ament that even the ventilator couldn't keep her son alive.

Daniel was transferred to Children's Hospital of Michigan on Sept. 12, where he was put on an ECMO (extracorporeal membrane oxygenation) machine, which works like an artificial heart and lungs. The ECMO oxygenates the blood and pumps it through the body of a person whose organs are failing. The idea is that the ECMO can do the work a person's body can't do on its own, giving it time to heal.

"I knew that he needed a lung transplant to live," Tammy Ament said. "I just prayed that there would be someone who was a match."

To have the transplant, Daniel would need to be transferred yet again. This time, to Henry Ford Hospital in downtown Detroit, which is a lung transplantation center.

But moving Daniel, whose condition was extremely fragile, wouldn't be simple.

The race for new lungs

Dr. Nicholas Yeldo, a cardiothoracic anesthesiologist and intensive care doctor who was part of the transplant team, described the frantic race in early October to deliver a sterile, sealed, portable ECMO machine to Children's Hospital of Michigan in the trunk of a colleague's car.

"Without the heroic measures that were taken in this case, this young patient would have died," Yeldo said at a news conference in November. "There is no doubt about it."

Daniel was switched from the ECMO at Children's to the portable machine, stabilized, and taken by ambulance to Henry Ford.

Five days later, Daniel was placed on the organ transplant list.

"What I saw in his lungs is nothing that I have ever seen before, and I have been doing lung transplants for 20 years," said Dr. Hassan Nemeh, surgical director of thoracic organ transplant at Henry Ford Hospital, who was among the team of doctors who performed Daniel's surgery. "There was inflammation and scarring and dead tissue. This is an evil that I haven't faced before."

It was the night of Oct. 15 when Daniel finally had his transplant surgery.

And a couple days later, he woke up after 50 days of sedation, and began to panic.

He was alone, in a yellow hospital room. A tube in his throat was connected to a ventilator, so he couldn't talk, and he couldn't move.

Daniel's mother usually stayed by his side, even sleeping at the hospital every night. But it so happened that she went home on the night Daniel woke up.

He was hallucinating, and said he thought he'd been kidnapped. Nurses tried to keep him calm and to explain everything he'd been through.

"I just remember them telling me that I got a transplant and then how long it's been," Daniel said. ... "And they were like, 'It's from vaping,' and I kind of have a vague memory after that point. I didn't really understand it."

As the realization of what he'd been through registered, Daniel thought about the gift he'd been given with the new lungs, but also how much he lost.

"I was thinking a lot about my plan, especially wanting to join the Navy and try to be a Navy SEAL or to join the Army and try to be in the Special Forces," Daniel said. "That was one of my main thoughts. I wouldn't have that opportunity to even try and do that anymore. ... I wouldn't even be qualified to try out. I just wanted the opportunity to try out and I definitely cannot try out."

Because he'll be on immune-suppressing drugs for the rest of his life to keep his body from rejecting the new lungs, he can't be exposed to things that could make him sick.

So he doesn't shake hands anymore. He can't swim in a lake or fresh water anymore, which means he's not allowed to sail his 4-meter sailing dinghy, either, because of the risk that it might tip.

"It's still hard to think about," he said. "So many opportunities are taken away. I don't have the freedom that I would have had."

As Daniel regained consciousness, he had to be weaned off the ventilator, learning to breathe again, talk again, and walk again.

"My recovery has just been very hard," he said.

The new normal

Daniel now takes more than 20 pills a day.

"It's anti-rejection meds, anti-fungal meds, anti-infection meds, blood pressure, a bunch of stuff for your heart, magnesium, multivitamins, antidepressants, which I didn't take before, antianxiety, stuff like that," he said.

His mother explained that Daniel goes every day to pulmonary rehabilitation, has weekly clinic appointments, blood draws, and a bronchoscopy every three months to make sure his body isn't rejecting his lungs.

It's heartbreaking to think that this didn't have to happen to him.

"I know our kids don't listen to us, but you have to talk until you're blue in the face to them about the dangers of vaping," Tammy Ament said. "They don't want this to happen to them or their child. It's like playing Russian roulette. These kids don't understand. They were all vaping the same thing Daniel was and who knows why it hit him and why it hit the other 60 people that have died" so hard compared to others.

"We have to keep talking because we have to prevent our kids from having access. And, just all of this being promoted to the younger kids, the little kids the fifth-, sixth-seventh-graders because once they put it in their mouth and it gets into their lungs, they're going to become addicted to nicotine."

Daniel's talking about it, too, hoping that the voice of a peer, someone who is their age, who vaped not so long ago, might make a difference.

"I was using the same thing as everyone else," he said. "I'm not a special case. I was completely healthy and it can happen to you just as easily as it happened to me.

"I never thought it was going to happen to me Just look at my story, do your research, and definitely if you haven't started already, don't start.

"A lot of people told me they quit because of me, which I think is really good. I think a lot of people are really starting to listen. That's good."

Daniel started his own nonprofit, Fight4Wellness, to spread the message and hopes to write a letter to the loved ones of the person who donated the lungs to him.

"I will put my lungs to good use, so the family can kind of feel like it wasn't in vain," he said.

NUCLEAR

"The other states that have created similar panels have had success," Hoadley said. "I think the key was that frustration about this was happening, and many of the decisions are going to be left to a company that comes in and makes decisions about our community, and our lives, and leaves."

What the bill does

The bill creates a panel, under the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs, that would be composed of representatives from state agencies, the legislature, and local tribal councils, and as well as citizens representing the interests of local governments, businesses, environmental protection and regional water quality, emergency planning agencies, agriculture, radiology and science education within the immediate area surrounding the plant undergoing decommissioning.

Members of the International Brotherhood of Electric Workers and United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry who are present or former employees of a nuclear power plant in Michigan would also be included on the panel.

The panel would report on community impact, job transition planning, municipal tax implications, proper radioactive waste storage and disposal, among other things.

The first meeting of the panel must be within 90 days after the bill is singed into law, and must meet quarterly into the future.

Hoadley said he thinks this bill will get bipartisan support in the Michigan legislator because it is simple, straightforward and it would be a sad state if lawmakers didn't support the community having a voice.

Wide support already

Outside of Michigan's environmental groups and other nuclear energy watchdogs, the bill has already gained support of nuclear power plant officials.

Palisades spokeswoman Val Gent said Entergy looks forward to participating in a locally created decommissioning advisory panel for Palisades to help keep the public informed about decommissioning activities.

"We think that local communities are the best qualified to determine how these advisory panels are created," she said.

Cook Nuclear Plant in Bridgman is another facility that would be affected by such a panel, when the day comes for it to be decommissioned.

Cook spokesman Bill Downey said maintaining open and transparent communication channels with the community has always been an important component to the way Cook conducts everyday business.

"Although the planned decommissioning for Cook's two units is still far in the future, when the time does come, we would welcome opportunities to continue that important, positive community relationship," Downey said.

Other supporters of the bill include the Utility Workers Union of America (UWUA) and the Michigan Pipe Trades Association.

"These facilities provide more than just energy, they employ many people and make significant contributions to the regional economy and especially to the tax base," Patrick Dillon, UWUA executive vice president, said in a news release about the bill. "Rep. Hoadley's important legislation takes meaningful steps to mitigate the economic and environmental impacts as area nuclear plants are taken offline. This measure is a commonsense approach we look forward to working together to advance."

What is decommissioning?

In simple terms, decommissioning is getting a nuclear site's radioactivity down to acceptable levels: 25 millirem a year. A millirem is the measure of radiation the body absorbs as it's exposed to radioactive material.

For comparison, in the environment, humans are exposed to about 620 millirem a year.

When a power plant is decommissioned, companies can get the radiation levels down several different ways: either letting the radioactive material decay over a chosen number of years, or cleaning and removing radioactive parts of the plant.

"When final decisions are made, to move waste or leave at the site, they owe it to the community to sit at the table and talk about the decisions," Hoadley said.

The nuclear fuel rods are removed from the nuclear reactor as soon as a nuclear power plant is closed, placed into the spent fuel pool for at least a year for cooling, then transferred to dry casks, according to NRC regulations.

Dry cask storage is used because the U.S. doesn't have a permanent storage facility for spent nuclear fuel.

The used fuel will remain secured on site, under guard, monitored during shutdown and decommissioning activities, and subject to the NRC's oversight until it is removed by the federal Department of Energy, which it is contracted to do eventually.

The casks are stored on a concrete pad, 2-3 feet thick, designed to support the weight of the casks through all sorts of scenarios such as earthquakes, tornadoes and other natural occurrences.

Environmental concerns

The storage and removal of radioactive material is a big concern for Michigan environmental groups.

In a news release shortly after the bill was introduced, the Sierra Club Southwest Michigan Group said a citizens advisory panel would safeguard the dismantling of nuclear power plants and the safe handling and storage of low-level and high-level nuclear waste.

"Decommissioning a nuclear plant is a complicated and risky process," said Bette Pierman, Sierra Club member and Michigan Safe Energy Future-Shoreline Chapter representative. "Safe dismantling can take years or decades and cost millions of dollars – more time and money than it took to build the plant. It is important for us as citizens to be involved in every step to assure a safe decommissioning for all of us."

By ALEXANDRA NEWMAN
HP Staff Writer

Record-high water levels on Lake Michigan have been creating problems for property owners all along the lakeshore since last summer.

But what about the large nuclear power plants that sit right along the lake, using water from it to run their turbines?

Locally, Palisades and Cook nuclear plant officials say the plants are designed to handle whatever nature throws at them, including erosion and high water levels. The nuclear industry has learned over a number of years to have such safeguards against natural events, like earthquakes, in place.

Palisades spokeswoman Val Gent said Palisades is largely protected from beach erosion because the waterfront along the plant is generally not as exposed, due to robust barriers that surround the plant.

"Still, Palisades takes the issue of beachfront erosion seriously," she said. "We routinely inspect the shoreline and water levels are monitored regularly."

Bill Downey, spokesman for Cook Nuclear Plant in Bridgman, said the plant is not experiencing any adverse impacts as a result of the rising levels of Lake Michigan.

"Lake levels have been cyclic over the years and are expected to change again in the future," he said. "The Nuclear Regulatory Commission requires licensees to use very conservative assumptions regarding maximum lake levels."

Downey said as part of that planning, Cook Plant maintains its dry cask fuel storage facility outside the plant perimeter away from the lake, and at a significantly higher elevation.

Students in the two introduction to psychology classes taught by Edward Stern at Lake Michigan College have formed a joint board of directors to obtain and evaluate student opinion regarding the textbook, teaching techniques used and subject areas which need reteaching.

"I see my students as customers," Stern said, "and I proposed to my classes that they create a board of directors to identify students needs and propose necessary modifications of the course material and its presentation."

Jane Fonda brings climate-change fight to L.A. ahead of Oscars

By JOHN ROGERS
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Two days ahead of the Academy Awards, two-time Oscar winner Jane Fonda brought her Fire Drill Friday campaign against global warming to Los Angeles on Friday, demanding a dramatic reduction in carbon emissions over the next 10 years.

The rally, which drew a crowd of a few hundred to the steps of City Hall, was the 15th that Fonda has held since last fall. The first 14 were in Washington, D.C., where she and others were arrested multiple times.

"We marched together and we protested together and chanted and sang together and we got arrested together," the 82-year-old actress, dressed in a bright red jacket and red hat, told the crowd. "The purpose was to raise awareness of the urgency of the climate crisis."

Friday's rally took place just as pre-Oscar events were kicking off all over town, but Fonda, a best actress winner for the films "Klute" and "Coming Home," never mentioned the ceremony.

Instead, she said she was excited to be home in Los Angeles because California, plagued by wildfires and drought in recent years, "is the front line of the crisis."

Her audience, largely quiet until she took the microphone, ranged in age from young to old, with many carrying signs supporting the cause.

Fonda, a prominent activist since her early 1970s opposition to the Vietnam War, asked the crowd to demand among other things a 50 percent reduction in fossil fuel emissions over the next 10 years. She wants that followed by a phaseout of the fossil fuel infrastructure over the rest of the century.

When the dollar doesn't stretch far enough

SJHS creates food program to benefit low-income students, families

By TONY WITTKOWSKI
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — Every Friday a line of grocery bags can be seen lined up alongside the wall of St. Joseph High School's front office.

Inside these bags are a unique array of donated food items that students from various classes bring in. The initiative is referred to as the Weekend Food Program, in which classes at the high school take turns bringing in food to be redistributed to low-income students and families.

Tracy Wagner, guidance counselor at the high school, said the idea was born through a similar effort from a school in Elkhart, Ind.

"We're finding out that things are tight for some students and their families," Wagner said. "We feel like we've been hearing more of that."

A group of teachers and counselors got together after someone read an article about a food program at Elkhart schools that helped distribute excess food to a food sharing program in South Bend.

After speaking with the school's food service director, Wagner said they realized it would be harder to do the same thing because of federal rules and regulations.

"We got together, created a little website and sent it to our staff and coaches, thinking we would have to move it out to some other families in the community," Wagner said. "But we've filled up with teachers who are doing it with their classrooms and coaches doing it with their teams."

Some of the school's secretaries took a week to fill the bags on their own. During another week, some of the administrators from the district's central office pitched in.

Wagner said it's been a collaborative effort so far.

Since the school began doing this a month ago, about 15 students and their families benefit from the program.

Wagner said the families differ in their struggles. In some cases a parent is unemployed, or maybe "underemployed."

"There are cases when the dollar isn't stretching far enough," she said. "We've also got some medical situations where they are dealing with the costs."

Normally, a classroom puts the food together by asking for volunteers to bring in recommended foods.

The high school's foods teacher came up with some sample menus and food ideas in trying to get a balance for families with a mix between grain, fruit and vegetables.

"In wanting to make sure if someone doesn't have a microwave, we wouldn't give them a big turkey," Wagner said. "We look for things that are easy to put together."

Students stop into the front office on Thursday or Friday and take their bag home for the weekend.

This week it was just one AP literature class that collected enough food for all 15 families.

"I thought it would take a little more on our part to let people know there was a need. But our teachers are so in tune with responding to what kids need," Wagner said about the outpouring response. "I'm also not surprised because we have a staff and community that gets a response when there's a need."

There's a chance the program could continue through another means of resources this summer.

One of the high school's math teachers who has been involved in the food program is in the process of applying to the St. Joseph Public Schools Foundation for a grant to see if it can continue through the summer.

"Hopefully when more people hear about it, we can keep it going," Wagner said. "People can get in touch with us and we can administer the bags each week if needed."

Anyone who has questions or wishes to get involved can contact Wagner by emailing her at twagner@sjschools.org.

District running a deficit, but expects to make it up soon

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

BERRIEN SPRINGS — The Berrien Springs school district is still running a $1.6 million budget deficit for the 2019-20 year but officials expect that deficit to decrease or disappear in coming months.

School board members approved the first 2019-20 budget amendment at their meeting Thursday. They also received an update on the district's continuing effort to transition to competency-based learning over the next few years.

The general fund budget amendment approved this week has revenue at $55.03 million and expenditures at $56.67 million, for a $1.64 million deficit. The budget approved last June called for a $1.3 million deficit on a budget of $53.37 million in revenue and $54.67 million in expenditures.

Business Manager Ellen Hasse said that while per pupil state aid ended up higher than expected, enrollment was down about 40 students from projections made last summer. The district had anticipated total on- and off-campus enrollment to be 5,791 students.

She said expenses went up due to a number of factors, including increased enrollment after the fall count date of 300 students and the accompanying need for more staff and supplies in the off-campus alternative education program, as well as an increase in expenses for the $9 million Sylvester Stadium project.

Both Hasse and Superintendent Dave Eichberg said they expect the deficit to be much smaller, and it may even turn into a surplus, by the end of the fiscal year on June 30.

As it stands now, the district's fund balance sits at $11.89 million which represents more than 20 percent of general fund expenditures. Districts try to have a fund balance of at least 15 percent of expenditures.

Board members heard reports from teaching staff, Curriculum Director Angie Cramer and Eichberg on student data and competency-based education. The district has made a commitment to transition to competency-based, personalized learning in coming years.

Third-grade teachers and high school math teachers spoke about the work of their professional learning communities. They told board members that each professional learning community looks at student data to see where learning gaps are and who needs more targeted instruction. They also use the data to inform the instruction they offer.

Cramer and Eichberg presented draft plans for competency based instruction models and the "vision deck" which will educate staff, students, parents and the community about competency based learning. The district has already implemented some elements of competency based education and will do more over the next five years.

The goal of competency based education is to personalize learning to students' needs and to measure what students know and can do. Students and parents can expect to see student assessment change from traditional letter grades to an assessment that measures true student achievement. Behavior and attendance will be reported on but will not be part of a grade.

"We will still have assessments but it won't just be the traditional pencil and paper," Eichberg said. "It could be a performance or the presentation of a project or done in a number of other ways to demonstrate their learning."

Cramer said the instructional model has five components with the district's "portrait of a graduate" and the skills and skill sets they need at the center. The other four components are a relevant and rigorous curriculum, a competency-based personalized learning system, a safe and supportive culture and climate, and purposeful and authentic assessments.

Eichberg said both the instructional model and the "vision deck" are works in progress and in draft form now awaiting more input from staff and others. He said the vision deck will include the district's mission and vision, the school and community profile and traditional and future learning.

In other action, the board approved participation in the Michigan School Business Officials Bus Purchase program. Eichberg said the district is getting a $40,000 grant for clean fuel burning buses to go toward the purchase. He said the three new buses the district is getting will be both diesel and propane fueled. Each bus will cost around $110,000.

RESA final 2 interviews for superintendent are Tuesday

By RALPH HEIBUTZKI
HP Correspondent

BERRIEN SPRINGS — The Berrien RESA Board of Education will has settled on two finalists for its next superintendent.

Board members will interview Berrien RESA Assistant Superintendent Eric Hoppstock and Lapeer Community Schools Superintendent Matthew Wandrie, starting at 1:30 p.m. Monday, after the regular meeting, where they'll present an overview of their first 90 days in office, according to a district news release.

Both meetings take place at the Berrien RESA Administrative Conference Center, 711 St. Joseph. St., Berrien Springs, and are open to the public.

The board announced its choice after interviewing Hoppstock, Wandrie and Lakeview Public Schools Superintendent Blake Prewitt, its other original finalist, earlier this week. The Michigan Leadership Institute is coordinating the search process. Dave Killips is serving as the district's search consultant.

The board hopes by mid-February to name a successor for Superintendent Kevin Ivers, who has led the district since 2010. He's retiring after the current school year ends on June 30. The district expects that schedule will give its new superintendent ample time "to gather information from Dr. Ivers, staff, local superintendents, along with visitations to area ensuring a smooth transition," according to its website, berrienresa.org.

Killips helped the board develop a profile of 10 qualities it wants in its next superintendent, which are also posted on its website, and emerged from a series of focus group sessions.

Those qualities include a track record of progressive leadership, strong communications skills,understanding of the district's vision and mission, plus an ability to show forward thinking and solve problems, the profile states.

Battle for lane supremacy is not worth it

When you are driving on a three lane expressway and you are in the far left passing lane and want to move back into the center lane at the same time as a car in the far right lane wants to move into the center lane, who has the right-of-way?

CW from Coloma

Hello CW, thank you for your question. Before I answer your question I want to address the actions of the drivers before they change lanes. Usually driving in the left lane is not permissible unless you meet one of the exceptions listed in MCL 257.634. As you described in your question, when there are three lanes of same direction travel (sections of I-94 would apply here) you may travel in any lane. Other exceptions for operating in the left lane of a two lane same direction roadway would be turning left, overtaking or passing, or construction in the right lane. If you do not fit one of the exceptions, travel in the right lane!

Memo: Political donations at risk without action on erosion

LANSING (AP) — A major figure in the Michigan Republican Party whose Lake Michigan property is eroding suggested that political donations would fall unless GOP lawmakers do something to help, according to a memo.

Peter Secchia, a Grand Rapids businessman, has been a Republican donor and activist for decades. His name is on the state party headquarters in Lansing, and he served as U.S. ambassador to Italy when George H.W. Bush was president.

Cory Morse / The Grand Rapids Press via AP, File

Peter Secchia speaking at the dedication ceremony of Michigan State University's new Grand Rapids Medical Research Center. ambassador to Italy when George H.W. Bush was president.

Secchia sent a letter in November to Republican leaders in the Legislature, noting a $6 million property loss in Ottawa County due to extraordinarily high lake levels eroding the shore and threatening homes.

"There seems to be little interest in the Michigan House of Representatives or the Michigan Senate," Secchia's memo said. "This lack of concern mystifies me. Our property values will diminish greatly ... hence, our donations will also diminish."

The memo was obtained and released by a liberal group, Progress Michigan.

Secchia told The Detroit News that he wasn't directly tying political contributions to action on lakeshore erosion. He said he meant that donations could slide if property owners suffer financial losses and can't afford to support politicians.

"I am not threatening anybody," Secchia said. "I am just saying, 'Hey guys, think about this.'"

He didn't offer a specific remedy when asked by the News as to what Michigan lawmakers should do.

State lawmakers are pushing to expand the criteria for declaring emergencies that could trigger government assistance for people struggling to protect homes.

Homeowners are extending battered seawalls, constructing berms and piling stones and sandbags. Some are elevating houses or moving them farther inland. The Michigan environment department has issued more than 400 permits for such projects.

Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, a Democrat, is proposing $40 million in grants to help communities confront record-high Great Lakes levels and other severe weather events.

Cancer doc's guilty plea to fraud to stand, judge says

DETROIT (AP) — A Detroit-area doctor sentenced to 45 years in prison for putting hundreds of cancer patients through needless treatments should not be allowed to withdraw his 2014 guilty plea, a judge said Friday.

Farid Fata insists he got bad advice from his lawyer and was assured he'd get a shorter sentence if he pleaded guilty to fraud and cooperated with the government. But prosecutors didn't seek his cooperation, and he didn't get a break.

Fata's lawyer denied telling him that he could get a 20-year prison sentence.

"Fata, knowing his receipt of any cooperation credit was uncertain, pleaded guilty for many reasons, including: the evidence against him was overwhelming; he knew he would receive a life sentence if convicted at trial; he wanted to save his patients from having to testify at trial and from enduring a lengthy and 'brutal' trial," U.S. Magistrate Judge David Grand said.

Next, we need to consider that any time you change lanes you must use a turn signal. The Michigan Court of Appeals looked at MCL 257.648 and found the following: "We hold that MCL 257.648 requires drivers to use a turn signal when changing lanes on a highway and is not unconstitutionally vague." So we know that we need to use a turn signal before changing lanes.

It's now time to check the lane you are preparing to move into. MCL 257.642(a) states that "A vehicle shall be driven as nearly as practicable entirely within a single lane and shall not be moved from the lane until the operator has first ascertained that the movement can be made with safety." Here we really dive into your question. You are in the right lane, have your turn signal on and are ready to move to the center lane. You see another car in the far left lane that also appears to be ready to move into the center lane. What should you do? My suggestion is not to immediately change lanes. Adjust your speed to create distance ahead or behind the other car that also wants to change lanes. When the other car is safely in front or behind you, and the center lane is clear, you may now safely change lanes.

But what if you both changed lanes at the same time and had a collision? The officer will try to determine who occupied the center lane first and had possession of the lane. This may not always be an easy thing to do. Both drivers may claim that they had possession of the lane first and if there are no witnesses it could be hard to determine who was at fault. In order to avoid injuries, citations, damaged cars and expenses, make sure you use a turn signal, look carefully before you change lanes and be prepared to wait if necessary before your lane change.

Send in your questions about the law; get an answer from those who enforce it. Email your question to AskACop@TheHP.com and it may be featured in an article.

First female, lesbian to lead Michigan Episcopal diocese

By COREY WILLIAMS
Associated Press

DETROIT — The Michigan diocese of the Episcopal Church is about to welcome its first female and first openly lesbian bishop this weekend.

The elevation of the Rev. Bonnie A. Perry to bishop in Michigan comes as some Christian denominations in the U.S. struggle with issues of same-sex marriages and gays or lesbians in church leadership roles.

Perry was elected last June at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Detroit and her ordination will be held Saturday in the Detroit suburb of Dearborn.

The Rt. Rev. Gene Robinson became the Episcopal Church's first openly gay bishop in 2004. Episcopal conservatives opposed to the ordination of gay priests later formed the separate Anglican Church in North America in 2009.

In January, United Methodist Church leaders unveiled a plan to resolve its dispute over same-sex weddings and gay and lesbian clergy. Conservative churches opposed to the election of lesbian or gay bishops would form a new denomination.

Perry said Friday during a news conference at the Detroit church that she is aware of what her election as bishop means to others.

"If you look at scripture, Jesus said absolutely nothing about homosexuality," she said. "And over and over and over again, we see Jesus always being with people who were perceived by other folks to be on the margin, to be outsiders or less than or not worthy."

"I just hold that in my ministry," Perry continued. "Anyone that's on the margin needs to be welcomed."

Episcopal Church Presiding Bishop Michael Curry will lead Saturday's ordination. He said the church as a community seeking to follow Jesus "must be a place" where God's "love is lived out."

"And living out that kind of unselfish, sacrificial, profoundly inclusive and welcoming and embracing love means that applies to everybody," he said.

The Episcopal Church says the Rt. Rev. Barbara Harris became its first female bishop when she was ordained in 1989 in Massachusetts. The Rt. Rev. Mary Glasspool was the church's first lesbian bishop in 2010 in Los Angeles.

Perry most recently lived in Chicago. She was ordained as a priest in 1990 in the Diocese of Newark. She later led the congregation of All Saints' in the Diocese of Chicago.

OBITUARIES

William David 'Dave' Mohr

Aug. 23, 1928 – Feb. 1, 2020

Dave Mohr, 91, of Benton Harbor passed away peacefully on Saturday, Feb. 1, 2020, at Hanson Hospice Center.

Dave was born Aug. 23, 1928, in South Haven, where he grew up. The son of LC Mohr, the superintendent of schools, and Mabel Wegner Mohr, a teacher, Dave graduated from South Haven High School and earned his bachelor's, master's and doctorate degrees in chemical engineering from MIT, where he was in the Army ROTC, played tenor sax and sang in the men's octet, the Logarhythms. After college he served in the U.S. Army's Chemical Corps during the Korean War, though he was never deployed to Korea. After discharge, Dave went to work at DuPont, where a colleague and his wife introduced Dave to Elizabeth (Liz) Heaton. Within a year, Dave and Liz were married and were blessed with 60 years together.

Soon after they were married, Dave and Liz moved back to Southwestern Michigan to start their family and a couple of businesses – Instracon and Die-Cast Electronics. Both businesses helped area industry install and maintain electronic instruments and control systems. Dave's efforts helped his clients use new technologies, remain competitive and keep jobs in Southwestern Michigan.

Dave was a devoted and loving husband and father, supporting his wife and kids in all their pursuits and encouraging them to "do their own thing." He was generous with his time and loved helping others build or fix things and advance their ideas and passions. He had a brilliant mind, loved all puzzles and did extensive research on an alternative approach to musical tuning known as Just Intonation. Friday lunches were at DiMaggio's, staying connected with a group of old friends and their faithful waitress.

Dave believed deeply in the teachings of Jesus Christ. He was for many years an active member of the First Congregational Church of Benton Harbor where he sang in the choir and taught Sunday school. In later years, Dave and Liz were welcomed into the congregation at the First Congregational Church of St. Joe, and Dave greatly enjoyed singing in the choir there.

In addition to church choirs, Dave's love of singing was expressed in barbershop quartet groups. He sang with the local chorus for 40-plus years and with many quartets, including most recently his dear friends, the Kor Vets.

Dave lived in Southwestern Michigan for all but 14 of his 91-plus years, and his love of Lake Michigan, its beaches and the area's produce was profound. Peaches, red and black raspberries and blackberries were his favorite fruits, while Liz's cherry pie and blackberry flummery were his favorite desserts.

Dave was preceded in death by his parents; his stepmother, Louisa Durham; his brother, C. Michael (Mike) Mohr; a niece, Christine; and a granddaughter, Elizabeth.

He is survived by his wife, Liz; his sons, Bill (Carol) and Ed (Geri); daughter, Liz/Betsy; niece, Martha; grandchildren, Maggie (Mark), Nick, Lily and Lexie; and great-grandson, David.

Remember Dave by enjoying time with family, savoring a fruit pie and singing, especially singing in harmony with others.

In lieu of flowers, donations in Dave's memory may be made to the C. Michael Mohr (1955) Undergraduate Research Opportunities Program (UROP) Fund at MIT, 600 Memorial Dr., W98 2nd Floor, Cambridge, MA 02139 (Fund ID: 3159180), or the Humane Society of Southwestern Michigan, 5400 S. Niles Road, St. Joseph, MI 49085.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, March 21, the First Congregational Church of St. Joseph. Those wishing to sign Dave's memory book online may do so at www.starks-menchinger.com.

Gene Reynolds, director who brought war into America's living rooms with 'MASH', dies at 96

By STEVE MARBLE
Los Angeles Times (TNS)

LOS ANGELES — Gene Reynolds, an adventuresome Hollywood director and writer who brought the absurdities of warfare into America's living rooms with "MASH" and used the tough inner-city schools of Los Angeles as a blueprint for "Room 222," has died at age 96.

A child star who became more intrigued with the other side of the camera as he grew older, Reynolds died Monday of heart failure at Providence Saint Joseph Medical Center in Burbank, the Directors Guild of America confirmed.

During a long career, the director also turned to the Los Angeles Times, and particularly the city desk, when he was fleshing out early episodes of "Lou Grant," the popular prime-time drama in which Ed Asner – as the gruff yet ultimately kind-hearted city editor – prowls the newsroom at the fictional Los Angeles Tribune.

Reynolds told the Times that television had long depicted newspapers in a simplistic fashion – editors and executives cowering from their readers while reporters sleuthed their way through the city, more private eyes than actual journalists. Reynolds said he sought to show that the heart and soul of the newspaper was its newsroom, the final waiting room for a thousand different stories.

"Lou Grant," like "MASH" and "Room 222," had to overcome critics, poor ratings and nervous network executives to survive. Each, though, became a runaway hit, with the final episode of "MASH" drawing the single largest audience for an episode in a prime-time series. And Reynolds won Emmy awards for all three.

Eugene Reynolds Blumenthal was born April 4, 1923, in Cleveland. His father was a struggling businessman, his mother a model. The family moved to Detroit and finally Los Angeles as his father sought work. Reynolds broke into acting as an extra on "Our Gang" comedy short films and studied drama at the Pasadena Playhouse.

Reynolds was contracted when he was only 14 by Metro-Goldwin Mayer to play the younger version of lead actors in a long list of films, often in flashback scenes – Don Ameche as a boy in "Sins of Man," a young Jimmy Stewart in "Of Human Hearts" and a pint-sized Robert Taylor in "The Crowd Roars." Convinced his career would never fully blossom, he joined the U.S. Navy during the height of World War II.

When he was discharged, he turned to directing, working on "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," "My Three Sons" and "Hogan's Heroes," which he told the Times underscored his mounting concern that there was nothing – even life in wartime – that network television couldn't trivialize.

Reynolds had already met success with "Room 222," which tackled pressing issues such as civil rights movement, feminism and the Vietnam War from the perspective of adolescents in urban Los Angeles, when he was asked to take on "MASH."

CBS was hoping to capitalize on the enormous success of the Oscar-winning 1970 Robert Altman movie of the same name, but hoped to deliver its audience something more family-friendly and benign.

Reynolds, though, opted to stick closer to the comedic darkness Altman had found in the story of a group of medics stationed at a mobile Army surgical hospital near the front lines during the Korean War. Though the television series was set during the Korean conflict, the show was very much about the Vietnam War and its characters very much the tortured, hollowed-out pawns in a war that to them seemed pointless.

Reynolds said he sought to be sensitive to the horrors of combat and the valor of the medics and soldiers on the battlefield, but felt it necessary to focus on the absurdity of it all.

"They're in the middle of a war where everything is designed to kill, but they're in the business of putting these bodies back together again, only to have them sent back … which becomes like shoving a rock up a hill only to have to roll down again," Reynolds told author David S. Reiss for his book "MASH: The Exclusive, Inside Story of TV's Most Popular Show."

Reynolds found the perfect vehicle for his anti-war narrative in Alan Alda, an emerging actor who brought a world-weary cynicism to the character he portrayed, Benjamin "Hawkeye" Pierce.

Still, put up against ABC's "Wonderful World of Disney" – 60 minutes of family-friendly wholesomeness – "MASH" nearly skidded off the runway. Ratings were poor, reviews tepid and network executives skittish.

Reluctantly, CBS gave the show a second season, and it took off on an 11-year run, ending with a final two-hour episode that drew 105.9 million viewers.

Alda, Loretta Swit, Harry Morgan, Mike Farrell and others in the show's entourage said Reynolds was remarkable for inviting actors into the script-writing process, urging them to participate in developing and expanding their characters.

"Gene would take us through the script, page by page, to see if anyone had any questions or suggestions," Farrell said in an interview with the Hollywood Reporter. "I thought, these people want to hear from the actors about the script? Oh, my God, I'm in heaven."

He is survived by his wife, Ann, and a son, Andrew.

Leslie Jones livens up Siriano's NY Fashion Week front row

By LEANNE ITALIE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — With shouts of "Work it! work it!" from superfan Leslie Jones in the front row, Christian Siriano helped kick off New York Fashion Week on Thursday, rolling out sculptured show-stopping gowns, looks of rainbow fringe and pops of bright "funhouse" green.

The "Saturday Night Live" alum could barely contain herself, hopping out of her seat at times to cheer on models as Heidi Klum looked on.

In a backstage interview, Siriano told The Associated Press he drew inspiration in part from the DC Comics superhero film "Birds of Prey," the story of how Harley Quinn joins forces with others to battle crime lord Black Mask.

Column gowns came in "Joker" Jacquard and multicolored "Harley" fringe. Among Siriano's finale looks were architectural mermaid gowns in a sparkly silver crystal and black print with boxy waists, worn with wide-brim hats. There was ample black, and velvets in blush and fuchsia. He also put out gowns, cropped blazers and flare trousers in eggplant.

Siriano said he let his imagination run wild as he jumped off from Quinn's story.

"Everybody has a little inner Harley Quinn. She's rock and cool and edgy and dark, which this collection has, but how do we elevate her, make her a little more glamorous, somewhat more put together? In the film there's this really cool kind of Gothic funhouse, so that set the tone," he said. "That got me to look into surrealist paintings and the Dada art movement, so that inspired a lot of the sculpture."

There was a lot of shine, texture, reflected light and sparkle in tiered ruffles, sequin fringe and shimmery knits. Siriano stayed true to a range of body types, one of the things that drew Jones to him in the first place when she couldn't find a red carpet designer who would fit her 6-foot frame.

While working on his Fall 2020 collection, Siriano was busy multitasking ahead of the Oscars on Sunday.

"It's really hard. I have literally half my team back doing Oscar dresses that are going on a plane. That's a little frustrating," he said.

By DEE DEPASS
(Minneapolis) Star Tribune

With much needed boosts to sales and new orders, Midwest manufacturers said they returned to solid growth in January.

It was the second month in a row that manufacturing conditions improved in nine Midwestern states surveyed by Creighton University in its Mid-America Business Conditions Index.

Manufacturing nationwide also rebounded, with factories reporting to the Institute for Supply Management that on average they returned to growth. In December, the national index was 47.8; in January, it rose to 50.9. Anything above 50 signals expansion.

The Mid-America index showed brisker growth, with its index in January leaping to 57.2 from 50.6 in December. The index was at its highest point in almost a year.

The survey findings landed Monday, just after several multinational companies such as 3M, Polaris and Graco recently reported fourth quarter results that were mixed, signaling domestic sales increases, but in several cases the continued slowdown of business from China and sectors such as auto, aerospace and industrial.

Creighton's January surveys were conducted before the coronavirus outbreak in China fully hit and therefore do not include impacts from what has developed into a growing international health crisis, university officials said.

The Creighton report – which tracks factory conditions across Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Arkansas and Oklahoma – did see an unexpected uptick in employment in January, following months of complaints that trade tariffs and the inability to find and hire workers was severely hampering job growth.

"January's positive employment reading was a positive and unexpected outcome," said Ernie Goss, director of Creighton's Economic Forecasting Group. "The weakness in the region's manufacturing and agriculture sector (had) spilled over into the broader regional economy. Over the past 12 months, the Mid-America region has added jobs at (only) a 0.6 percent pace. (That's) less than half the 1.4 percent rate of the U.S. economy."

Other positives for the region included increases in inventories and export orders, even as imports sank dramatically during January.

Supply managers reported enhanced confidence levels for the month that were aided by January's passage of the new trade agreement among the United States, Mexico and Canada (USMCA), as well as the signing of the "Phase 1" trade agreement with China.

Nearly a third of all factory managers Creighton surveyed reported that shifting U.S. trade policies and resulting trade war caused them to change international vendors and disrupt traditional supply chains.

While it is too soon to see actual sales results from the new trade agreements, factory heads reported feeling more confident the future.

"Approximately 56 percent of supply managers expect USMCA and Phase 1 Chinese agreement to have a positive impact on their business prospects," Goss said.

No handshakes? Tech show adapts to virus

By KELVIN CHAN
Associated Press

LONDON — A major European technology trade fair has a low-tech idea for reducing virus risks: go hands-free.

Organizers of this month's Mobile World Congress show are advising attendees to adopt a no-handshake policy, threatening to dampen visiting executives' ability to meet and schmooze customers. Show organizers also plan to step up cleaning and disinfecting and make sure speakers don't use the same microphone. Some companies, meanwhile, are pulling out or scaling back plans.

MWC is an important networking and lobbying opportunity for mobile industry executives and government officials from around the world. It's the world's biggest wireless industry trade fair, held in Barcelona, Spain, on the other side of the globe from the virus outbreak's Chinese epicenter.

More than 100,000 people were expected to attend this year, with about 6 percent from China. The coronavirus has now infected more than 31,400 people globally and killed more than 630, most of them in China.

Sustainable business forum on water levels

Michigan's Great Southwest Sustainable Business Forum will host a luncheon program examining how high-water levels may impact local business, sustainability and climate action on Feb. 20 at Wightman in Benton Township.

High-water elevations are already affecting discharges from municipal wastewater treatment plants and industrial discharges, and could also affect sewer lines and stormwater best management practices.

There are now documented cases of national pollutant discharge elimination system permit violations caused by existing water levels.

The forum's featured speaker is Jerrod Sanders, assistant director for the Water Resources Division at the Michigan Department of Environment, Great Lakes, and Energy.

He will present on the current status of Great Lakes water levels, the reason why this is happening, and what EGLE is doing about it.

Critical steps on setting up your small business payroll

Hiring employees for your small business can help lighten your workload. But it also creates the need to manage something you didn't need to worry about when you were handling all aspects of your business by yourself:

Payroll.

Even if you have just one employee, you need to do payroll accurately and in compliance with all legal and regulatory responsibilities. If you don't, you could incur costly penalties from the Internal Revenue Service.

Before you hire your first employee and put processes in place to handle payroll, make sure you pay attention to two important details.

■ Register for an Employer Identification Number (EIN).

The IRS requires that you have one before you hire employees. You can apply for an EIN online at www.irs.gov or contact the IRS to establish one. Your EIN will be used for reporting taxes and other documents to the IRS. You'll also need your EIN when reporting employee information to state agencies.

Also, check to determine whether or not you'll need state or local ID numbers to process taxes.

■ Know the difference between an employee and an independent contractor.

Laws and requirements are different for them when it comes to withholding and paying taxes and in how you conduct your working relationship.

A few key differences include:

■ Generally, employers provide employees with all the equipment, supplies, software, and tools they need to perform their jobs. Independent contractors use those that they own.

■ Employees typically have their work hours set by their employers, whereas independent contractors control their own work hours.

■ With employees, you the employer will need to withhold income tax and Social Security and Medicare tax from their paychecks. You'll also need to remit federal and state unemployment taxes. When hiring help, employees must complete IRS Form W-4 (Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate) so you can withhold the proper amount from their pay.

Conversely, independent contractors are responsible for directly remitting tax payments; you do not withhold taxes from their compensation. Ask them to complete IRS Form W-9 (Request for Taxpayer Identification Number and Certification), which certifies they are not employees.

■ Independent contractors send you an invoice for services rendered.

After you have these key action items checked off your list, you can concentrate on other details such as deciding on a pay period and either choosing a payroll system or outsourcing your payroll administration.

For more information about payroll requirements, visit the Understanding Employment Taxes page of the IRS website. Also consider contacting your local SCORE chapter to get insight from a mentor who can point you to the right resources and guide you as you grow your business.

Can't pay the IRS what you owe? This is the one thing you should do.

Michelle Singletary

If you owe federal taxes and can't pay them, the first thing you should do is call the IRS.

Don't call the number you see on your television screen or the one you hear in a radio ad. Make the IRS your first stop so that you don't fall prey to a scam. Because, contrary to the claims on the commercials promising quick relief, private companies are not likely to get your tax debt reduced to pennies on the dollar.

And to be clear, I'm not talking about a taxpayer who's fighting the IRS over the legitimacy of a deduction. If you've got a complicated tax situation, you may need to hire a certified public accountant or an attorney who specializes in such tax cases.

But if your issue is an unpaid tax debt that you've been ignoring, just contact the IRS.

By March, the IRS plans to add about 850 employees spread out in 19 locations across the country to staff key collection telephone lines. An additional 1,000 seasonal workers will also be hired. The workers are being specially trained to handle calls from people who have received balance-due notices for unpaid taxes, according to Eric Hylton, head of the IRS' Small Business/Self-Employed Division.

During a conference call with reporters, Hylton said 200 of the jobs are being funded from revenue generated by money collected through private agencies hired to collect certain outstanding, inactive tax debt.

"The new hires are part of a larger effort by the IRS to focus on helping taxpayers who are having trouble paying their tax bills," Hylton said. "If people can't pay and start receiving notices from the IRS, it is critical that they reach out as soon as possible in this process. Interest and penalties can quickly accrue. Things get worse the longer people wait."

The IRS employees answering the collection lines will be able to help folks figure out their payment options. The vast majority of people calling will find they qualify for a streamlined installment agreement, said Darren Guillot, deputy commissioner for collection and operations support in the Small Business/Self-Employed Division

Guillot recounted a recent call at a center in Fresno in which an IRS employee assisted an elderly taxpayer. In less than 25 minutes, the IRS worker was able to determine that the woman was a hardship case.

"As much as this taxpayer wanted to set up a payment arrangement, she provided us with sufficient information so that we could counsel her toward paying whatever she felt she could afford," Guillot said.

If you've gotten a balance-due notice in the mail from the IRS, you will find a toll-free number you need to call within the letter.

If you're still too scared to call the IRS, go online to set up a payment agreement. Search for "Payment Plan" at irs.gov and you'll be directed to the online application to pay off your balance over time. A long-term payment plan is available to those who owe $50,000 or less in combined tax, penalties and interest. You can set up a monthly payment agreement for up to 72 months.

You can also apply for what's called an "Offer in Compromise" or OIC. This program is intended to help people who are so financially strapped that it's unlikely the agency could collect all that the government is owed.

An OIC allows you to settle your tax debt for less than the full amount owed. Search for "OIC" and then use the pre-qualifier tool to check your eligibility.

"It's quicker, it's more efficient and it's less intrusive for Americans to go online to irs.gov and resolve their tax liability all by themselves without any interaction with the IRS and a person having to wait on the phone if they owe $50,000 or less," Guillot said.

Once, during a budget session, a woman I was working with admitted that she owed the IRS about $25,000.

She'd been avoiding responding to the letters the IRS had been sending.

"You've got to take care of this," I urged.

"I'm scared," she said, shaking. "I don't have that kind of money."

After some coaxing, she called the number listed in one of the letters. In less than 15 minutes, she was on a payment plan she could afford. I even persuaded her to move in with her sister so that she could reduce her expenses and get rid of the tax debt even faster than the plan she had set up with the IRS.

Don't let your fear get in the way of settling your tax debt. Help that won't get you scammed or cost you thousands of dollars is just a call or click away.

Behavioral Economics

Q What's behavioral economics? — B.W., Augusta, Georgia

A It's an academic field that applies psychology and other social sciences to how people make financial (and other) decisions — revealing that we don't always make logical moves. For example, if people are told that a $5 bottle of wine costs $45, they're likely to prefer it to one they're told costs $5. In another example, naming its coffee cup sizes "tall," "grande" and "venti" helps Starbucks charge more for them, as they're not as easily compared to other purveyors' small, medium and large sizes.

We're often irrational in investing, too. We might leave money in a losing stock, hoping it'll eventually recover, instead of accepting our losses and moving the remaining funds to a more promising stock. Economist Richard Thaler explains: "Losses have about twice the emotional impact of an equivalent gain. Fear of losses (and a tendency toward short-term thinking ...) can inhibit appropriate risk-taking." On the flip side, irrational exuberance has led us into many market bubbles with wildly overpriced stocks.

Are You Ready for Retirement?

If you're like most Americans, you're not ready for retirement and haven't been saving enough for it. Indeed, fully 40% of workers have saved less than $25,000, per the 2019 Retirement Confidence Survey, conducted by the Employee Benefit Research Institute. Fortunately, it's probably not too late to improve your financial condition. Here are some things you should know:

• You could live a long time, so your money may need to last a long time. The Social Security Administration says, "About 1 out of every 3 65-year-olds today will live past age 90, and about 1 out of 7 will live past age 95."

• Speaking of Social Security, don't count on it to fund much of your retirement. The average monthly retirement benefit was recently $1,503, or about $18,000 per year. It was only designed to provide about 40% of pre-retirement income; the majority of us, without generous pension income to look forward to, need to be saving for our futures.

• Health care is likely to cost you a lot in retirement. One estimate from Fidelity is that, on average, even with Medicare, a 65-year-old couple retiring this year will spend $285,000 out-of-pocket, on average, on health care — and that excludes long-term care costs. You may, of course, spend much less, or much more, than that. (Getting and staying healthy is one way to improve your odds of spending less on health care.)

• You won't always get to choose when you retire. About 43% of current retirees say they had to retire earlier than they expected, primarily due to a job loss or health issues, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute.

So what can you do about all this? Start saving aggressively — you'll probably need to sock away 15% or more of your income. And invest long-term dollars effectively, such as in the stock market, via a low-fee S&P 500 index fund.

My Dumbest Investment

Blown Fuse

My dumbest investment was in shares of Fuse Science. It was 2011, and the company had recently signed an endorsement deal with Tiger Woods. Fuse made energy and electrolyte replenishment products that were delivered via drops — hence its ticker symbol, DROP.

I was excited by the company, thinking it would revolutionize the sports energy and medicine market. I did no due diligence and invested too much of my net worth in the company — I made all the classic mistakes. The company is now involved with drones, I believe. — S.F., online

The Fool Responds: Fuse Science shares have been worth much less than a penny apiece for a long time now, and its website is gone. Even back then, there were ample warning signs, such as widening losses: The company lost about $80,000 in its fiscal year 2010, followed by a loss of $2 million in 2011 and $11 million in 2012. Indeed, the company only took in about $105,000 in revenue in 2012 — that's less than many people's salaries.

A big-name celebrity supporting a company can inspire confidence, which is what it's supposed to do — but remember that the celebrity is typically getting paid in cash, not in shares.

It's best to avoid any company with shares trading for less than $5; instead, look for a proven record of substantial and growing sales and earnings, with little (or manageable) debt.

The Motley Fool Take

Growth and Value

Stocks are often categorized as either "growth" stocks or "value" stocks; growth stocks promise ballooning returns, and value stocks offer slower but steady growth at a relative bargain price. Cancer drug developer Exelixis (Nasdaq: EXEL) is both, making it particularly compelling.

Exelixis' most popular drug is Cabometyx, treating patients with liver cancer or advanced kidney cancer. The drug aims to stop the growth and division of cancer cells, which can prevent tumors from growing, potentially shrinking them.

The company's third-quarter results, released in October, show Exelixis' net product revenue was $191.8 million, a 17.7% year-over-year increase. Cabometyx product sales of $187.4 million made up 98% of net product revenue and 69% of the company's overall sales for the period. (The company also earns considerable collaboration revenue from deals with partners.)

Cabometyx might eventually generate further revenue from additional approvals, as it's undergoing clinical trials for other cancers, including bladder cancer and prostate cancer.

Exelixis recently sported a forward price-to-earnings (P/E) ratio of only 21 and a price-earnings-to-growth (PEG) ratio of 0.43 — anything below 1 typically reflects a value stock.

The stock is not low-risk, but risk-tolerant long-term investors may want to take a closer look at it. (The Motley Fool has recommended Exelixis.)

I travel-hacked a college tour and saved $3,000

Liz Weston

Amtrak's "buy one, get one" spring sale got me started.

My teenage daughter and I had used a similar two-for-one deal last year to take an overnight train trip from Los Angeles to Portland, Oregon. This year, she wanted to use her spring break to check out colleges in Chicago as well as the Pacific Northwest. When Amtrak announced the return of its companion fare sale, I thought a couple of nights on a sleeper train might be a good way to start our college tour. She agreed.

At the same time, I noticed that we had travel rewards piling up all over the place: points, miles, free anniversary nights at hotels, even a Southwest companion pass that had yet to be used. At NerdWallet, we're always telling people to spend rather than hoard their rewards, which get less valuable over time thanks to program devaluations.

So I decided to see how much I could save on one 10-day trip. The answer: more than $3,000. I'm bragging, but I also hope my experience might help you get more value from your own rewards programs.

First, the details. Our itinerary includes two nights in an Amtrak sleeper car, two airline tickets from Chicago to Seattle and six nights in historic hotels in three cities (plus one night in a convention hotel). The fare for our flight home was less than $90; and I got to use that companion pass, which allows me to add another person to any flight I book with Southwest for only the cost of fees and taxes (in this case, just $5.60).

My total cash outlay for all the booked travel: $846, including $740 for the Amtrak double-bunk roomette. The price tag for the trip without all the discounts: $4,234. This total doesn't include most meals, in-city transportation or incidentals (such as college sweatshirts).

Also not included are the annual fees I pay for the credit cards that provided most of these rewards. Those fees totaled $733. That seems like a lot, but that cost is more than offset by other card perks, including travel credits, airline lounge access and free breakfasts at hotels.

Most important, we don't carry credit card balances, so we don't pay interest. The only way to win the travel rewards game is to pay balances in full every month, since otherwise interest costs will overwhelm any travel savings. If you do carry balances, look instead for a low-rate credit card that will help you pay off your debt faster.

If you're new to travel rewards cards, or just want to get more out of the ones you have, here are my tips:

Hotel-branded credit cards rock

It's typically easy to use your points because there are often tons of available rooms and no blackout dates. In most cases, the annual fee is more than offset by the free night you get on each cardmember anniversary. The downside: You can only redeem your points at that brand.

But a general issuer rewards program helps, too

General travel rewards cards offer the flexibility to book with a number of different hotels or airlines. You can transfer points from the general rewards card to other frequent traveler programs or use your points to book travel directly through their portals.

Check the couch cushions

In addition to two anniversary nights that were about to expire, I had about 2,500 points moldering away in a forgotten Amtrak rewards account, which paid for coach seats from Seattle to Portland.

It's OK to keep it simple

Typically I'll use a travel comparison site such as Kayak to get an idea of gzotel and airline sites to see if I can get favorable exchange rates for my points. Once I've found a good deal, I'll transfer points from a general rewards program to book the travel. But sometimes it's nice to take the easier, faster way. I booked most of our hotel rooms and the flight to Seattle directly through a general rewards card's travel portal. My points were worth 1.5 cents each, which is a decent return, and I didn't have to spend hours comparing all my options.

'Booked' is better than 'best'

It's fun to score a big win, but the most important thing is that the rewards get used. Points programs are constantly being devalued, meaning it takes more points to get the same reward. Points in some programs can even expire (shudder). So don't lose your points – use them.

The Week Ahead

In a hiring mood

New Labor Department data should provide insight into employers' demand for workers.

The last Job Openings and Labor Turnover Survey showed the number of available jobs fell 7.6% in November from the previous month to 6.8 million. Economists project the new figures, due out Tuesday, will show the number available jobs remained at about the same level in December.

Mixed results?

PepsiCo serves up its latest quarterly report card Thursday.

Wall Street predicts the food and beverage company's fourth-quarter earnings declined from a year earlier, even as revenue increased. That would echo PepsiCo's results in the previous two quarters. Investors will be listening for the company's latest earnings outlook for 2020.

Sizing up retail sales

Retail sales increased by 0.3% in October, November and December, reflecting Americans' willingness to spend during the winter holidays. Economists forecast that the trend continued last month. The Commerce Department issues its January snapshot of retail sales Friday.

Wall Street closed out its best week in eight months Friday with a broad slide as technology and health care stocks gave back some of their recent gains. The pullback ended a four-day winning streak for the major U.S. stock indexes. Stocks rallied strongly for most of the week, erasing all their earlier losses from worries about the severity of the economic fallout from a new virus from China that's rapidly spreading.

Company Spotlight — Rotating Ford's tires

Ford's stock fell 2% on Friday following the company announcing a management shakeup to deal with its poor launch of the new Explorer SUV.

The company reported a $1.7 billion loss on Tuesday, mostly tied with the defects that plagued the new Explorers. The vehicles came off the assembly line with multiple problems and had to be shipped to a Detroit-area factory for repairs, delaying deliveries to customers and costing the company sales.

The company also had other higher warranty costs during the year, especially for a glitch-prone six-speed automatic transmission in the Ford Focus compact car.

In response, Ford said it would shake up management in the wake of the Explorer's troubles. The Dearborn, Michigan-based company says automotive President Joe Hinrichs will retire effective March 1. Jim Farley, president of new business and strategy, will become chief operating officer in charge of global markets and automotive operations.

FARMERS GO COW CHIPPING
Dairy farmers are looking to the latest microchip and drone technology to squeeze more efficiency out of milk production as low prices and changing consumer habits ratchet up financial pressure. Rosendale Dairy in Wisconsin has implanted microchips in each of its 9,000 cows that allow the company to monitor nutrition and productivity. Feed is calibrated to deliver a precise diet and machines handle the milking. Drones gather data that helps bump up yields for the feed crops. The initiatives by Rosendale Dairy and others come as the industry's two big milk processors, Dean Foods and Borden Dairy, head for bankruptcy protection.

BREWS RESCUE SHELTER DOG
A Florida brewery's move to turn its beer cans into adoption flyers for shelter dogs helped reunite a family with its long-lost best friend. Monica Mathis of St. Paul, Minn. spotted her terrier mix, Hazel, on one of Motorworks Brewing's beer cans, called the "The Four Packs." It had been photographed and posted on social media. The dog went missing three years ago when Mathis was living in Iowa. The Manatee County Animal Shelter helped confirm the dog's identity with Mathis and will cover the cost of transporting Hazel to Minnesota. Mathis said she has no idea how the dog got to Florida.

LOAN STATEMENT OVERLOAD
A student loan company may have gone too far when it sent an Ohio man 55,000 duplicate statements in one mailing. College Ave Student Loans sent the duplicates, which took up 79 bins, to Dan Cain of Twinsburg, Ohio. The company blamed an error in its mailing system. It also said it was putting corrective measures in place to prevent similar errors from happening in the future. "We are working with Dan directly on a remedy, including picking up the mail from him if possible and a statement credit for the inconvenience," the company's chief operating officer, Tim Staley, said.

Quotable

"I'm very disappointed we couldn't work out a deal, but as an 8% holder I'm looking forward to a higher bid for the team."

How virus threatens Chinese economy

Locked in a trade war with the United States, China hardly needed any more economic trouble. But a new viral outbreak, centered around the industrial hub of Wuhan, has led economists to downgrade their outlook for the world's second-biggest economy.

Growth in China last year had already hit a 29-year low of 6.1%. That was partly because President Donald Trump imposed tariffs on $360 billion in Chinese goods in a conflict over Beijing's drive to overtake America's technological dominance.

Now the coronavirus has paralyzed business in China. Wuhan and surrounding cities are on lockdown, isolating 50 million people. Companies from Starbucks to General Motors have suspended operations. Other businesses that depend on Chinese imports are bracing for shortages of vital supplies.

Oxford Economics estimates that the crisis will slow Chinese economic growth to 5.4% this year from the 6% it had previously estimated.

Back in 2003, the SARS outbreak only temporarily disrupted Chinese economic output. But China is far more integrated now into global supply chains, and its share of global economic output is up to 16% from just 4% in 2003.

Behind the YouTube curtain

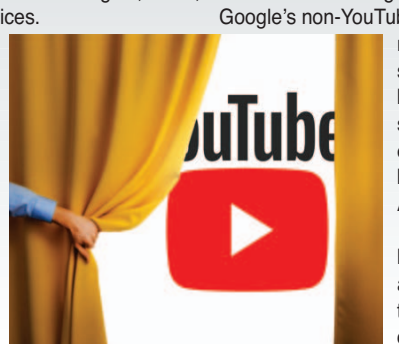
After years of secrecy, Google is finally providing a peek at YouTube's finances.

It's something Wall Street long clamored to know, but Google's management has steadfastly resisted. Instead, Google blended YouTube's results with revenue from its search engine, email, maps and other digital services.

But things have changed as Sundar Pichai became CEO of parent company Alphabet in December, replacing Google co-founder Larry Page. Alphabet delighted investors by revealing YouTube's revenue for the past three years.

The numbers were as impressive as many analysts suspected, providing further evidence that Google got a bargain when it bought YouTube for $1.76 billion in 2006.

YouTube's advertising revenue of $15.1 billion makes it one of the world's biggest marketing machines. In the digital arena, only Facebook and Google's non-YouTube services generate more ad revenue. Among video services, YouTube ranks behind Netflix's ad-free subscription service, and easily outstrips traditional broadcast networks such as ABC and NBC.



What still isn't known is how much YouTube makes after paying ad commissions to its top video producers and covering other expenses.

Finally, some numbers: Alphabet has started to report YouTube's ad revenue separately from the rest of Google.

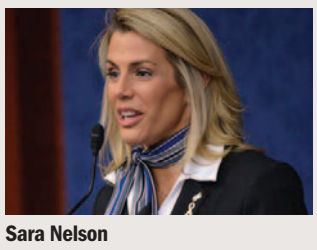
InsiderQ&A

Airline unions aim to fly higher



Sara Nelson
President
Association of Flight Attendants

The airline industry is among the most heavily unionized in the U.S. economy, and workers are seeking a bigger share of the airlines' multibillion-dollar profits.

Sara Nelson, the president of the Association of Flight Attendants, says too many employees — especially at the smaller regional airlines — struggle to get by. She says there could be wildcat strikes despite a federal law that makes it nearly impossible for airline unions to conduct legal walkouts.

Nelson talked recently to The Associated Press.

Labor is already the biggest cost at most airlines. Should they be spending even more?
Labor investment has not rebounded to what it should be now that the airlines are making a substantial profit again.

What do union workers want in contract negotiations?
Airline employees took incredible cuts during the bankruptcies (from 2001 through 2013) — 30% to 40% cut in pay, loss of pensions, a shift of costs and burden for health care — and not all of that has been recovered. Our staffing has been cut to minimums so that we are working harder than ever when we are at work, and we are all working longer hours to make the same amount of pay. The airlines are profiting in the billions of dollars, and we expect our fair share.

Will we see an airline strike in the near future? The law requires National Mediation Board permission for union strikes or management lockouts.
Airline management has come to believe that they can stall negotiations and actually put off increasing labor costs by doing so. The Railway Labor Act provides a fairly fulsome right to strike for employees. The issue is accessing that right to strike, and this administration has not shown any desire to give workers that right to strike. There is, though, a point at which it just becomes too much for people. And at a certain point, laws are not going to stop workers from standing up.

So, there could be wildcat strikes if workers feel desperate?
I should be very clear that that's not what I'm advocating for in any way, but that is the growing sentiment. I think it's something that needs to be taken very seriously by everyone who is in a leadership position in this industry.

Flights are crowded and airlines are jamming more seats on planes. Is the job of a flight attendant getting harder?
We have a real concern over how comfortable passengers are because it directly relates to their experience, their mood and how much time we need to spend with de-escalating conflict and resolving these concerns. And it is harder to do all of that because we have 25% to 50% less staffing on domestic flights and we are seeing cutbacks on staffing on international flights, too. So, yes, our jobs are harder than they have ever been because each one of us is doing more with more people on board in conditions that lead to greater conflict.

Prosecute firms that lie to get tax breaks, panel recommends

By MIKE CATALINI
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — Lying on applications to get tax breaks in New Jersey should open companies up to prosecution, and the state should create an inspector general post to watch over the agency handing out incentives, according to a new report published Friday by a legislative committee probing the credits.

Those were just two of more than two dozen recommendations in the Special Committee on Economic Growth's final report, issued after nearly a year of looking into the now-expired tax incentives and holding four public hearings. The Chris Christie-era tax break program expired June 30, meaning that new applications aren't being considered, though previously approved awards could still be paid out.

The other recommendations include creating a compliance officer within the Economic Development Authority, which runs the state's multi-billion dollar tax credit programs, reducing the generosity of incentives and putting a cap on individual awards to companies but leaving annual disbursements unlimited.

"We took a hard look at the programs in place to determine the reforms needed to make them work with more transparency and accountability," said committee chairman Democratic state Sen. Bob Smith in a statement.

The recommendations don't go far enough, though, according to Darryl Isherwood, Democratic Gov. Phil Murphy's senior adviser for economic development. He cited the need for an annual award cap, calling it "integral," and pointing out the committee stopped short of such a recommendation.

"We're gratified that the committee has recognized issues first raised by the governor in the early days of his campaign," he said.

Economic Development Authority CEO Tim Sullivan said he took the report "to heart," but said it stood by the governor's call for overall caps on business tax breaks.

The committee's report comes about a year after Democratic Gov. Phil Murphy put tax breaks in the spotlight. Murphy cited state auditor and comptroller reports last year that raised questions about how the awards were handed out as the rationale for the creation of his own task force to probe the programs.

The task force met several times over 2019 and issued two reports, concluding that the development authority's process for handing out awards was shaky.

The agency had a bias in favor of approving awards and failed to adequately vet businesses' claims about the likelihood of their jobs moving out of state – a key factor in awarding tax breaks – according to the final report, issued last month.

The task force also said that its investigation led to voluntary terminations of awards that saved the state $11 million, though they've declined to specify any details about the returned tax break money.

Another significant outcome of the task force's work was the critical spotlight it shined on influential Democratic power broker George Norcross, whose firm benefited from the tax breaks. The task force, for example, turned up documents showing firms connected to Norcross gave inconsistent responses while applying for credits when asked if they were considering leaving New Jersey.

Norcross disputed the task force's findings and even went to court to try to stop the panel from issuing one of its reports but lost the legal fight. He defended his businesses in a hearing before lawmakers, saying the task force's work contained misstatements and "mischaracterizations." He's suggested the task force was conducting a political "witch hunt."

came Friday when Sweden's Ericsson, a major supplier of telecom infrastructure gear, said it was pulling out of the Feb. 24-27 event because it feared the health and safety of employees and customers "cannot be ensured." While there's little sign of a mass exodus in the works, the departure of Ericsson is a blow to the show because it's one of the biggest exhibitors.

South Korean tech company LG also withdrew earlier in the week.

Other companies are adjusting or scaling back their plans to adapt to travel and quarantine measures. The Chinese tech giant Huawei, a major sponsor, is assigning European staff to the show. Eric Xu, serving a six-month term as rotating chairman, is scheduled to hold a media briefing by video because he's unable to get to Spain with enough time to undergo the two-week self-quarantine period.

Jean-Baptiste Su, principal analyst at Atherton Research in San Jose, California, said he's decided not to attend because of virus worries.

"I just didn't want to take a chance," he said. ""It's that bad."

Su said many participants were coming from China, and "we don't know much about how the transmission of the virus works." He added that people he knows at big Silicon Valley companies are "on the fence" about attending, and their employers say it's OK if they don't want to.

Ericsson said it decided to withdraw after "an extensive internal risk assessment."

"Ericsson has thousands of visitors in its hall each day and even if the risk is low, the company cannot guarantee the health and safety of its employees and visitors," the company said.

Dropping out might affect Ericsson's business, though the damage would be limited, said Richard Fogg, CEO of tech-focused public relations agency CCgroup who has attended Mobile World for 17 years.

More important is the signal it sends.

"Ericsson could be the start of a domino rally," Fogg said. "It gives smaller vendors permission to potentially pull from attending."

However, he said there was not much discussion among his clients yet of the virus. He said cost is also a factor because exhibitors have already paid their fees.

The show's organizers, GSMA, said it regretted and respected Ericsson's decision to pull out.

"Ericsson's cancellation will have some impact on our presence at this time and will potentially have further impact," the group said.

Organizers and local authorities have been scrambling to contain worries about the virus this week.

Barcelona Mayor Ada Colau said MWC will go ahead "in a completely normal way" despite the virus and cancelations.

"I hope there are no more announcements like those" by Ericsson and LG," Colau told Catalan television channel TV3 on Friday. "I am told that all necessary precautions are being taken" so that the event can be held as safely as possible, she said.

Mats Granryd, director general of the GSMA, told The Associated Press on Wednesday, before Ericsson's announcement, that he doesn't "foresee this (as) more than a sort of a blip."

Microsoft said its plans to participate remain unchanged – for now.

"The safety of our employees is a top priority and we will evaluate the situation and adjust plans as necessary," the company said.

But LG said Tuesday that it was dropping out to remove "the risk of exposing hundreds of LG employees to international travel which has already become more restrictive as the virus continues to spread across borders." A day later, Chinese tech company ZTE said it was scrubbing the press launch for its new devices. ZTE also said it was adopting measures including disinfecting its exhibition stand daily and making sure it's staffed by employees from countries outside China, mainly from Europe.

Granryd said a few small Chinese companies based in Wuhan, China, where the virus first emerged, have also pulled out.

Brandywine boys score key BCS Red win over Bridgman

By BEN SPENCER

BRIDGMAN — Brandywine's boys basketball team inched closer to its second straight Berrien-Cass-St. Joseph Red Division regular-season championship after earning a key road victory against rival Bridgman on Friday night.

The Bobcats held off a late Bees' run to win 39-31 in a boys-girls doubleheader played at Bridgman. Brandywine's girls team also won its tilt against the Bees, 51-18.

In the boys game, Brandywine (5-1 BCS Red, 11-1) and Bridgman (3-2, 9-4) were locked in a defensive battle all game.

Each team hit just one three-pointer on the night, forcing both squads to focus on inside scoring.

"The kids kept battling," said Brandywine coach Nathan Knapp. "(There was) a little adversity we hit towards the end of the third. (Bridgman's) press was getting us into an up-tempo style a little bit and that was frustrating us.

"They did a really good job in their zone. We went four-out with the one post player, and the way they extended it caused us problems, but the kids battled in there and played hard all night."

Brandywine jumped out to a 12-4 first-quarter lead after scoring the final eight points of the opening quarter.

The Bobcats kept that same distance between them and the Bees entering halftime, taking an 18-10 lead into the locker room.

STEVENSVILLE — Strong defensive starts were key as Lakeshore and St. Joseph split a basketball doubleheader on Friday.

Lakeshore won the boys game 60-42, holding St. Joseph to 12 first-half points.

The Bears won the girls game 43-21, limiting the Lancers to six points before the break to stay unbeaten atop the Southwestern Michigan Athletic Conference West Division.

In the boys game, Lakeshore (5-1 SMAC West, 12-2) built an early 20-4 lead and was up 29-12 at halftime.

"Pretty good defense early," Lakeshore coach Sean Schroeder said. "Unfortunately too many offensive lulls where we don't have good possessions."

St. Joseph (2-4, 3-10) managed to close the gap in the third quarter before Lakeshore pulled away.

"It was an especially rough first half," St. Joseph coach Gregg Schaffer said. "We

Despite new manager, Cubs open camp with similar look

By ANDREW SELIGMAN
Associated Press

CHICAGO — After missing the postseason for the first time in five years, the Chicago Cubs kept quiet in the offseason while other teams loaded up.

It was frustrating for fans and even president of baseball operations Theo Epstein at times. But for those ready to bury them, slugger Kyle Schwarber has a message:

Put down the shovels.

"What we have here is still top tier," Schwarber said. "You look at a lot of people's track records and see what they've done in this game and see what they're still capable of. ... I would take this team any day."

With spring training set to start, Chicago is relying more on improvement from within after finishing third in the NL Central at 84-78 and missing the playoffs for the first time since 2014. While other teams have been loading up, the only major move the Cubs made was replacing Joe Maddon with David Ross.

They're hoping the popular backup catcher on the 2016 World Series championship team can spark a group that finished behind St. Louis and Milwaukee in the division. But the roster is largely intact. There are no major additions so far, just questions.

The biggest is how much longer 2016 NL MVP Kris Bryant will remain with the team. He could become a free agent in two years, and the Cubs might trade their star to stock up on young players rather than risk losing him in free agency.

His service-time grievance complicated any potential deals. But the Cubs got some clarity last week when an arbitrator ruled in their favor. The decision means Bryant will have to wait until after the 2021 season rather than hit the market next offseason.

Pitchers and catchers report to Arizona on Feb. 11. The first full squad workout is Feb. 17.

Chicago Cubs shortstop Nico Hoerner throws to first for the out on San Diego Padres' Manny Machado during a game last September. Hoerner figures to be the everyday second baseman at some point, if not opening day, after filling in at shortstop late last season.

NEW LOOK

The Cubs dipped into their past to take a step toward a future they hope includes a return to the playoffs when they moved Ross from the front office to the manager's office. They're banking on the leadership qualities "Grandpa Rossy" showed when he spent the final two of his 15 major league seasons playing in Chicago.

Ross has no coaching experience. And he's replacing one of the most successful managers in franchise history, with Maddon posting a 471-339-1 record in five seasons.

Pistons move to rebuild after trading Drummond

By NOAH TRISTER
Associated Press

DETROIT — Ed Stefanski needed only about a minute in his conference call before he said the word the Detroit Pistons have seemingly avoided for so long.

"We were always discussing that we were going to have to probably rebuild here," said Stefanski, a team executive. "We're in the middle of the pack. To me, that's not the place that we want to be in and where fans want to be in."

The Pistons have been hesitant to rebuild, but Stefanski said Friday that injuries and the team's performance made it the best option. Detroit traded Andre Drummond on Thursday to Cleveland, a team in the Pistons' own division. The return wasn't much. In exchange for a two-time All-Star center, Detroit received Brandon Knight, John Henson and a second-round draft pick in 2023.

It's hard to view that as anything other than an attempt to remove a high-priced player from the roster and break up the core of a team that hasn't performed as hoped. The Pistons haven't won a playoff game since 2008. Drummond has put up big numbers, but the team has only managed two postseason appearances with him and was swept in the first round both times.

The Pistons gave their core of Drummond, Blake Griffin and Reggie Jackson another shot this year – and they even added Derrick Rose in the offseason – but injuries to Griffin, Jackson and other players left Detroit with an uphill climb to make the playoffs.

"We are looking to rebuild," Stefanski said, using that word again. "What the future holds is going to be interesting. We haven't had the luxury the last two seasons of having any real cap flexibility. Now we have that. How do we use it? How do we use it wisely?"

IN BRIEF

Bryant declines to discuss grievance amid trade rumors

CHICAGO — A bout of the flu kept Kris Bryant from talking to reporters at the Cubs Convention three weeks ago.

But Bryant looked after Chicago-area reporters Thursday by declining to talk to Las Vegas media about the service time grievance he lost that will prevent him from becoming a free agent until after the 2021 season.

Bryant, however, was more forthcoming about trade speculation involving him and the Cubs, who might not be able to address several needs unless they move his $18.6 million salary.

"I tune everything out, especially in this world we live in now," Bryant told the Las Vegas Review-Journal during a promotional event. "You've got to tune out stuff that doesn't benefit your day-to-day life. I'm just focused on that every day. It sounds miserable.

"I've been happy working out at such a beautiful place like this. I'm ready to get going. I'm playing baseball for a living. I can't complain about anything."

Bryant, the 2016 National League MVP, likely will be the subject of trade speculation throughout spring training. The Cubs could decide to keep him at least through the middle of the 2020 season if they can't find trade compensation to their liking.

Chiefs fan says he took 'NFL hit' in meter collision

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A Kansas City Chiefs fan said he took a "professional NFL hit" when he slammed into a parking meter while trying to catch a pass from quarterback Patrick Mahomes during the team's Super Bowl victory parade.

LaRue Bell, 43, whose collision was caught on video, told The Kansas City Star that the pass was intended for him but that the parking meter denied him the opportunity Wednesday.

"That was my Super Bowl," said Bell, who acknowledged he was feeling a little sore when he arrived Thursday at his job with National Beef Leathers in St. Joseph, where he noticed coworkers laughing at the video of the failed pass on social media.

He soon learned millions of others also were watching it online. Even Mahomes checked in on Twitter, asking "Yo is the dude who hit the parking meter okay."

The video also shows the ball tip the top of a truck, with police standing in the back.

Pederson loses in salary arbitrations, owners lead 3-0

PHOENIX (AP) — The Los Angeles Dodgers beat outfielder Joc Pederson in salary arbitration, giving teams a 3-0 record in hearings this year. Pederson will be paid $7.75 million, while he had sought a raise from $5 million to $9.5 million. The decision Friday came while the Dodgers have been trying to work out a trade to send Pederson to the Angels.

The Dodgers went to their first arbitration case since defeating reliever Joe Beimel in 2007. The hearing was held before Elizabeth Neumeier, Walt De Treux and Howard Edelman.

Jason Day climbs within 2 of the lead at Pebble Beach

By DOUG FERGUSON
AP Golf Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Jason Day received a warm reminder Friday at Pebble Beach how good it feels to hit shots the way he wants, make a bunch of putts and see his name high on the leaderboard.

Day made two long birdie putts across the green, holed a 40-yard wedge for eagle on the dangerous par-5 14th, made a couple of big par saves and moved into contention with an 8-under 64 in the AT&T Pebble Beach Pro-Am.

He was two shots behind Nick Taylor of Canada, who birdied four of his last five holes at Pebble Beach for a 66 to take his first 36-hole lead on the PGA Tour.

Taylor was at 14-under 129. "I feel like it's been a long time since I've actually been out there and felt the way that I felt out there today and played well like that," Day said. Defending champion Phil Mickelson also got in the mix with aburst of four straight birdies after the turn at Monterey Peninsula. He made bogey on the long par-3 ninth to finish his round of 7-under. He was three shots behind.

Mickelson has not had a top 10 on the PGA Tour since winning at Pebble Beach last year, though he finished third last week at the Saudi International and carried a little momentum into the event he has won five times.

Day knows the feeling. Since last year at Pebble, the former world No. 1 has recorded just three top 10s, none since last June. He has not seriously contended. His back troubles have been so frustrating that at times he wondered how much longer he wanted to play. He described those at "dark times."

His outlook Friday was as bright as the sunshine over the Monterey Peninsula, at least until a light marine layer or parts of the courses lowered the temperature.

Day birdied the par 5s and made a 45-foot putt from the fringe on the par-3 fifth at Pebble. He holed a 50-foot birdie putt on the par-3 12th, another bonus. And then he surged into contention by holing out for his eagle on the 14th, and following that with a 15-foot birdie on the 15th.

There's still one more round before this tournament played over three courses takes shape, and there's no better place to be in relative calm than Pebble Beach.

"If you have really good weather, you can go low at Pebble," Day said.

That's what Taylor did, making birdie on all the par 5s for his 66. Ditto for Chris Baker, the 33-year-old PGA Tour rookie who played Pebble Beach for the first time in a practice round Wednesday, and really had a blast in his round of 64 on Friday that put him four shots behind, along with Charl Schwartzel (66 at Pebble).

Of the top five players, only Mickelson was not at Pebble Beach.

Monterey Peninsula played about two shots under par, while Pebble's average was nearly 1 under. Spyglass Hill was nearly a stroke over par, so it was no surprise that only one player from the top 20 – Matt Every – was at Spyglass on Friday.

Dustin Johnson, a two-time Pebble Beach winner who finished runner-up to Ted Potter Jr. two years ago, appeared to be hitting his stride with great control of his irons and usual power off the tee. He lost a little ground on the final hole when he three-putted for bogey from about 25 feet on his final hole at Monterey Peninsula, missing a 3-footer.

That happens on poa greens with foursomes in each group, and Johnson shrugged it off. He's used to odd things happening, even when it's not all his doing.

Day was feeling particularly optimistic, especially after the year he had. His back gave him so much trouble that one of his routines is to blow into balloon for some 20 minutes to help get his rib cage aligned properly. He used to spend hours chipping and putting. He found it a small victory when he was able to putt for an entire hour.

Jay Cutler reportedly talking to CBS and ESPN about NFL TV job

By PHIL ROSENTHAL
Chicago Tribune (TNS)

CHICAGO — Jay Cutler, who got intercepted en route to the broadcast booth 2 ½ years ago, might be back in play as a potential NFL TV analyst.

CBS and ESPN have met with the former Bears quarterback, according to The Big Lead.

Whether that means the man who provides much-needed comic relief on wife Kristin Cavallari's E! Entertainment Television reality show "Very Cavallari" will be working in the booth or studio next fall isn't yet clear.

What is indisputable is that his unflappable, deadpan presence on "Very Cavallari" has shown him to be much more likable than he may have seemed to critics in his playing days.

One Chicago sports columnist, the Sun-Times' Rick Telander, called Cutler "a strong-armed athlete with zero soul, zero charisma" near the end of his run with the Bears.

But Cutler always seemed to have fun during his regular radio chats with Marc Silverman and Tom Waddle on WMVP-AM 1000.

"As fake as TV is, that's real Jay," former Bears teammate Kyle Long said Thursday on WMVP-AM 1000 of Cutler's reality TV persona. "That is him, cut and dry – and honest."

Cutler originally signed with Fox in 2017, having supposedly retired as a quarterback after 11 NFL seasons, the last eight with the Bears.

Just three months later and three weeks before he was to make his debut, however, he was lured back by Adam Gase, the former Bears offensive coordinator who then was head coach of the Dolphins.

They continued to need help even with Cutler, who got banged up during a forgettable 6-10 season.

During a midseason primetime loss to the Raiders, just two weeks after Cutler was sidelined with cracked ribs, NBC commentator Cris Collinsworth wondered if Cutler had had second thoughts.

"You had to wonder when he had that devastating hit, broke his ribs and was lying on the ground, exactly what he was thinking," Collinsworth said. "He could have been sitting up here in a nice cozy booth … enjoying the game. Instead, he couldn't breathe and he couldn't sneeze." Cutler had seemed tentative about giving up playing to do TV from the time it was announced, balking when the word "retirement" was brought up.

"I don't feel that anyone ever really retires from the NFL," he said on "Waddle & Silvy." "You are either forced to leave or you lose the desire to do what's required to keep going. I'm in between those situations at this point in my life."

When Cutler made his U-turn to reunite with Gase, Fox wisely allowed Burkhardt and Davis to work as a two-man broadcast team.

"I put a lot of effort in with Jay and I like Jay a lot … but do I think a three-man booth for football is great? I don't," Burkhardt said in 2017. "We were doing it, and I get it, because we (would have had in Cutler) a rookie who needed some guidance. But I think a two-man booth for football is the way to go."

Burkhardt said Cutler impressed him in their short time together, including dry runs calling games from tape.

"We would have had fun and we would have made it work," Burkhardt said.

At the time Fox announced it had hired Cutler, another just-retired quarterback was joining the network TV ranks and similarly was set to take a high-profile position despite his lack of broadcast experience.

pretty much had a rough shooting night throughout the game. That put us in a tough spot to pull out a victory.

"We continued to battle in the second half. I was pleased we were able to cut it to 11 in the third quarter, we just couldn't sustain anything long enough to cut the lead more than that.

JJ Bushu finished with 18 points and five assists to lead Lakeshore.

He had 13 points in the first half before leaving in the third quarter with cramps. Schroeder said he could've returned, but the Lancers were able to pull away behind Ben Anderson and Ben Brower, who each scored 12 points.

Lakeshore won the rebounding battle 35-19, including eight boards by Gavin Foster, but was hurt by 21 turnovers.

"We've got to improve on the offensive end," Schroeder said. "There were some bright spots tonight offensively, but we have too many empty possessions and empty turnovers."

Conner Wright led St. Joseph with 10 points off the bench. Brennen Kerns added eight.

In the girls game, St. Joseph (7-0, 10-5) struggled with its shooting, hitting just 14 of 49 field goals (29 percent), but kept Lakeshore (1-6, 3-11) from reaching double digits until the fourth quarter.

"Early I thought we executed pretty well and then we just missed shots," St. Joseph coach Tracey Bloodworth said. "It was just kind of a typical rivalry game, it was scrappy."

St. Joseph's Eleah Hedstrom (22) and Leah Barlow (15) defend against Lakeshore's Ella Jeske during Friday night's game.

Alex Malone led a balanced Bears attack with nine points and Karly Klaer added seven.

St. Joseph held a 35-30 rebounding advantage, including 20 offensive boards.

"Our effort was good defensively; we did not rebound well," Lakeshore coach Michael Clark said. "St. Joe went after the ball a lot more aggressively than we did, which was too bad because we did a lot of good things defensively, forced them into tough shots, but in the end we didn't do get it."

Hollee Hercik scored six to lead Lakeshore.

"We just couldn't score," Clark said. "We got good shots when we ran our offense, but nothing seemed to fall."

The Bears played without Symone King, who had finger surgery and hopes to return, as well as Caroline Veine, who is out for the season.

"It definitely hurts, but at the end of the day it gives an opportunity to somebody else to step up and do some things," Bloodworth said. "I think you're going to see a variety of people do things on different nights."

BOBCATS

into the game and trailed by just three points entering the final quarter.

However, the Bees couldn't carry that momentum through the fourth.

Bridgman trailed 29-28 with just under five minutes to play after Hunter Adams converted an easy layup off an assist from Jayce Warren.

On the ensuing possession, however, Brandywine's Jordan Abrams knocked down the Bobcats' lone three-pointer on the night. Abrams was also fouled on the shot and converted the four-point play at the line to give Brandywine a 33-28 advantage and the game's momentum.

From there, the Bees struggled to get back into it. They cut the lead to 33-29 after a free throw by Jackson Schmaltz, but were forced to foul towards the end of the game. The Bobcats took advantage of the free shots to put the game out of reach for good.

Schmaltz led the Bees with 14 points. Adams chipped in six and had a game-high 15 rebounds, and Henry Branch also scored six.

Abrams ended the night with 11 for Brandywine, with Kendall Chrismon Jr. scoring a team-high 12, most of which came in the paint. Chrismon also nabbed nine rebounds to help the Bobcats to a 34-31 advantage on the glass.

Bridgman coach Mike Miller said the Bees had a historically poor night shooting the ball.

"I've been here a long time, and that is the worst shooting night a Bridgman team has ever had in this gym," said Miller, whose Bees were just 1-of-20 (5 percent) from beyond the arc while connecting on only 28 percent of two-point shots. "In a way, that's encouraging to me, because I thought we played really well other than that.

"I thought we played an extremely good floor game. We limited our turnovers against a very athletic basketball team that's good defensively. I thought we hustled and rebounded well tonight, so I was really pleased with everything."

Miller was also pleased with the Bees' defensive efforts, holding a Bobcats team that is averaging just over 63 points-per-game to just 39 on Friday. The Bees also forced 13 turnovers, five of which came in the third during their comeback run.

"We played great defensively," he said. "We had to start chasing fouls at the end. If you take away those last eight points, we held them to low 30s. I'm really proud of the way we played, we just missed shots. I think our kids hadn't been in a game like this where a conference championship was on the line. It was good experience to be in a gym that felt like March-type scenario."

For Brandywine, the win puts it in a position to take control of the division with four of the team's eight remaining contests coming against division opponents and two victories already against the second-place Bees.

"We had that (as a goal) on the board tonight," said Knapp on the importance of the win. "What's at stake is the No. 1-seed (in district play). This is where districts is going to be, too. It's going to be a lot like that, so it's a good experience for us. Now we've just got to do a better job and close things out."

Ron DeKett / HP correspondent

Bridgman's Talea LaVanway (14) looks for an open teammate as Kennedy Byrd (32) and Maliklyyah Abdullah (14) defend for Brandywine during Friday's game.

In the girls' matchup, Brandywine (7-0 BCS Red, 14-0) was in control from the opening tip, as the Bobcats never trailed in the contest.

"I was proud of the way we shared the ball," said Bobcats coach Josh Hood. "We attacked the basket. We've still got to work on hitting free throws a little bit better, but if you can go on the road and hold a team to five (points) in the first half and nine at the end of the third. I was proud of the defensive efforts."

Zakiyyah Abdullah led Brandywine with 24 points, three rebounds and a pair of assists. Abdullah's sister, Maliklyyah, scored 12 points, all on 3-pointers.

A majority of the points for Bridgman (2-4, 3-10) came in the fourth quarter. The Bees matched their total point production for the first three quarters (nine) in the final quarter alone.

Samantha Rydwelski led the Bees with seven points and added six rebounds.

Bridgman struggled mightily with turnovers. The Bees coughed it up 30 times compared to just eight for Brandywine.

Federer tops Nadal in South Africa; 51,000 turn up to watch

By GERALD IMRAY
Associated Press

Roger Federer wasn't going to lose this one to Rafael Nadal.

Not on what felt like a homecoming for Federer, who beat his great rival 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 in a three-set exhibition match at a soccer stadium in Cape Town, South Africa, on Friday.

It was Federer's first match in his mother's country of birth, and the country the Swiss great rates as his second home.

Almost everything was for Federer on the night. The caps and T-shirts with RF logos all across the crowd. The "Welcome home, Roger" signs being held up. The coin for the toss, a newly minted 20 Swiss Francs with Federer's image on it. Federer recently became the first living Swiss to be engraved on one of the nation's coins.

Even South Africa's biggest sports stars were in awe. Siya Kolisi, South Africa's Rugby World Cup-winning captain, came out pre-match to present Federer with a South Africa team jersey with Federer's name on the back. He was asked who he was supporting.

"Definitely Team Roger," Kolisi said. "Sorry, Nadal, I love you, too."

Nadal smiled graciously on the other side of the net.

The exhibition at Cape Town Stadium was to raise money for the Roger Federer Foundation, which supports early childhood education in six southern African countries, including South Africa. The foundation was hoping to top $1 million from the exhibition. It raised $3.5 million.

Also, a sellout crowd of 51,954 came to the Cape Town Stadium – built for the 2010 soccer World Cup – to watch Federer and Nadal turn it on. That's the biggest crowd ever on record for a tennis match. Organizers said the demand for tickets was in the region of 200,000 requests.

"It was a magical evening," said Federer, who came to South Africa regularly on childhood vacations with his family but hadn't been to Cape Town in 20 years.

The 38-year-old Federer, winner of a record 20 Grand Slam singles titles, and the 33-year-old Nadal, with 19 slams, laughed and joked regularly between points.

But they were typically competitive when the ball was in play.

Federer won the first point with a high backhand volley, and broke in the first game on the way to taking the opening set 6-4.

Nadal broke back twice at the start of the second set and unleashed his big forehand winners, grunting loudly in the process, to level at one-set-all.

Federer won with a dainty drop shot on match point. Nadal gave everything to get there, and was going so fast he couldn't stop in time and had to leap over the net.

He ended up standing next to Federer and they hugged.

"We tried our best as always," Nadal said. "It's a lifetime experience playing in front of such an amazing crowd in an amazing stadium. It was a big pleasure for me to be part of it."

Pistons fall to Thunder

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Chris Paul scored 22 points and Shai Gilgeous-Alexander added 21 to help the Oklahoma City Thunder beat the Detroit Pistons 108-101 on Friday night.

Danilo Gallinari scored 19 points, Dennis Schroder 18 and Steven Adams 16 for the Thunder, who have won nine of 10.

Former Thunder guard Reggie Jackson scored a season-high 28 points for Detroit. Christian Wood scored 27 points and Thon Maker added a season-high 19 for the Pistons.

It was Detroit's first game since trading Andre Drummond to the Cleveland Cavaliers. Drummond is a two-time All-Star who leads the league with 15.8 rebounds per game.

Detroit's leading scorer, Derrick Rose, sat out with a strained left hip. With the trade and injuries, Pistons coach Dwane Casey had just nine available players.

Late in the third quarter, Gilgeous-Alexander got the roll on a pull-up jumper and was fouled. He missed the free throw, but got the rebound and made a layup to put the Thunder ahead 74-63.

The Thunder led 78-68 at the end of the third quarter, then Jackson scored seven points in the first two minutes of the fourth quarter to cut Oklahoma City's lead to 85-78.

Detroit cut its deficit to four in the closing minutes, but Paul made two free throws and a jumper to give the Thunder a 103-95 lead with 1:31 to play, creating enough of a cushion for Oklahoma City to hold on.

Blue Jackets shut out Red Wings

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Elvis Merzlikins got a fifth shutout in his last eight starts and the Columbus Blue Jackets extended their points streak to 10 games with a 2-0 win over the Detroit Red Wings on Friday night.

Zach Werenski's second-period goal, his 17th of the season, broke a franchise season scoring record for defensemen for the Blue Jackets, who have won three straight and nine of 10.

Columbus dominated in the game, outshooting Detroit 44-16, but had trouble finding the back of the net with veteran goalie Jimmy Howard in goal. Howard faced a shooting gallery at times, finishing with 42 saves and slipping to 2-21-2 on the season. The 35-year-old has lost 18 straight.

Columbus has been on a roll the past two months. They are 9-0-1 in the last 10 and 19-2-5 since Dec. 9, earning 43 of their 69 points in that stretch. The win moved them back into third place in the Metropolitan Division.

CUBS

NEW LOOK

The Cubs dipped into their past to take a step toward a future they hope includes a return to the playoffs when they moved Ross from the front office to the manager's office. They're banking on the leadership qualities "Grandpa Rossy" showed when he spent the final two of his 15 major league seasons playing in Chicago.

Ross has no coaching experience. And he's replacing one of the most successful managers in franchise history, with Maddon posting a 471-339-1 record in five seasons.

ROOKIES TO WATCH

Nico Hoerner figures to be the everyday second baseman at some point, if not opening day, after filling in at shortstop late last season with Javier Báez sidelined by a fractured left thumb and Addison Russell hurt. Called up from Double-A in September, he hit .282 with three homers in 20 games.

Rookie Adbert Alzolay could play a prominent role in the back end of the rotation or bullpen. Though his ERA was 7.30 in four appearances last season, the right-hander threw four strong innings in his debut against the New York Mets on June 20 and followed that up with a solid outing against Atlanta in his first career start.

THEY'RE SET

Bryant, shortstop Javier Báez and catcher Willson Contreras were All-Stars last season, and Anthony Rizzo is a three-time selection. The first baseman also has three Gold Gloves.

Yu Darvish looked more like the star pitcher the Cubs thought they were getting when they signed him to a $126 million, six-year contract prior to the 2018 season. Coming off a brutal, injury-shortened first year in Chicago, he shook off a slow start to post a 3.98 ERA in 31 outings.

The first four spots in the rotation are set with Darvish, Kyle Hendricks, Jon Lester and José Quintana. The Cubs also figure to have closer Craig Kimbrel from the start. The seven-time All-Star struggled after signing in June.

THEY'RE NOT

Cole Hamels signing with Atlanta created an opening in the rotation that could go to someone such as Alzolay, Tyler Chatwood or Alec Mills.

ON DECK

The Cubs open the regular season at Milwaukee on March 26. Whether Bryant will still be with them remains to be seen.

PISTONS

picks. That hasn't happened in Detroit to this point. Other players with some value like Rose and Luke Kennard remained with the Pistons. Griffin is still around with his big contract.

Detroit can hope for improvement from some young players already with the organization and use its cap space to rebuild around Griffin.

"Do you use it on players? Do you use it on collecting assets to get players in trades? Having the flexibility, the obvious answer is, it's great to have it, and now let's use it wisely and make the right choices," Stefanski said. "And the draft is important to us too. We have our draft pick, and we have all our No. 1 picks going forward."

Detroit has given some young players opportunity. Bruce Brown, Svi Mykhailiuk and rookie Sekou Doumbouya have shown some promise. Christian Wood has looked like a potential fan favorite at times with his energy around the basket.

"We like Christian. He's worked well," Stefanski said. "As the coach has said, sometimes he has some issues on maybe not wearing a watch and knowing what time it is to get some places, but he's done a nice job on the floor. I think he's coming around."

Another concern following the trade was Drummond's reaction. He posted messages on Twitter saying there are "no friends or loyalty" in the NBA.

"I've given my heart and soul to the Pistons, and to have this happen with no heads up makes me realize even more that this is just a business!" he wrote.

Getting into green spaces

By RACHEL COALE
Michigan Department of Natural Resources

- Pedro Calderon de la Barca, 1600s' Spanish poet

People who enjoy the outdoors have extolled the benefits of being close to nature since they first laced up hiking boots for adventure instead of work. A growing body of research on human health and happiness is confirming how good it is for us to connect with nature.

Fortunately, Michigan has plenty of what is often called "green space." With 20 million acres of forest land, more than half the state is shaded by leafy canopy.

What is a green space?

A green space is an undeveloped area with natural features like trees and plants – it can be as small as a quarter-acre "pocket park" in the city or as expansive as the more than 100,000 acres making up the Pigeon River Country State Forest northeast of Gaylord, which conservationist P.S. Lovejoy called "the Big Wild."

No matter the size, these places matter. They contribute wildlife habitat and benefit the health of the environment and the people who enjoy them.

"There's an array of mental, physical and social benefits that we derive from green spaces," said Kevin Sayers, Michigan Department of Natural Resources Urban and Community Forestry Program manager. "People desire and understand the need for having trees, forests and other types of nature nearby."

In Michigan, our green spaces are diverse. We can visit old-growth forests, flowering prairies, windswept dunes and rich wetlands. But you don't have to go "up north" or far away from home to enjoy green spaces – local parks, gardens, sports fields and trails count too. Natural areas of all kinds support community health and wellness.

Green spaces are good for us

Just looking at trees has benefits – really. Research shows that office workers with a view of trees have lower stress levels that those who don't. According to an Exeter University study, even an office plant provides some mental health benefits.

Similar research shared by the Smithsonian Institution shows that children who grow up in neighborhoods with greenery have a lower risk of developing psychiatric disorders, even after adjusting for other factors.

The reasons why are still being investigated, but researchers theorize that green spaces help us recover from stresses caused by the bustle and friction of work and school environments. Just like wildlife, people also need the right kind of "habitat" to be happy and healthy.

In addition to the peace of mind they seem to bring, green spaces benefit communities by creating places to be active and play. They

Dave Mull

This mostly brown, wet thing we've called winter in recent days has been tough on southwest Michigan ice anglers. Ice forms on area lakes just long enough for guys to get out and catch some fish. Then rain and 40-degree days come. The ice honeycombs and to find safe ice, anglers must drive about two hours north.

This week's wintry blast of cold air and snow probably won't help much since ice doesn't form well under a blanket of insulating snow.

I took Amtrak to Devils Lake in North Dakota the last week of January. Although I would never call myself an ice fisherman, I enjoy doing it now and then. However, I rarely achieve any success. While I enjoyed the Devils Lake experience overall, I once again displayed a huge lack of ice-fishing talent.

Several members of the Association of Great Lakes Outdoor Writers (AGLOW) convened for pizza and beverages the night before we were to head out on this storied 160,000-acre water a snowball's throw away from the Canadian border. We all received an identical assortment of ice lures as well as a beanie and insulated gloves from Clam Outdoors. This Minnesota-based company,

Sandhill cranes and bald eagles seen locally

Southwest Michigan Wildlife

During the 20th Century, sandhill cranes did not arrive back in southern Michigan until late February or early March. In 2020, they are generally considered a year-round resident bird in the southern half of the Lower Peninsula, as long as snow cover is minimal, allowing foraging for waste grain on which they feed.

The winter of 2013-14 was characterized by heavy snowfall and frigid temperatures, and thus, sandhill cranes became virtually absent from the state during January 2014 until spring migrants began arriving in late February.

This winter there have been several reports of large flocks of sandhill cranes, seen in the fields just outside Dowagiac. On Feb. 3, I saw a flock of at least 300 of these large birds in flight off Oak Grove Road in LaGrange Township.

I also spied an adult bald eagle feeding on a dead deer carcass nearby but it flew off before I could get a photo. However, Carol Chinski of St. Joseph Township did capture a nice image of a bald eagle while she was visiting Sarett Nature Center's Brown Sanctuary on Feb. 3.

The Brown Sanctuary, located off Wood Street in Benton Township, was once a popular location for hunters to try their luck for ducks every fall, in the large marsh adjacent to the Paw Paw River. Since the 1990s, this area has been owned by Sarett Nature Center and is home for hundreds of ducks every winter. The bald eagle sighted by Chinski was likely at the sanctuary to try and catch a duck of its own.

Bob Doglan of Chicago reported a turkey vulture on Feb. 2, seen near Interstate 94 and Eaton Park in St. Joseph Township. Turkey vultures are common scavengers from March through October, and generally vacate Southwest Michigan before winter, although a few linger if weather is not too severe. While the first spring migrant turkey vultures usually arrive in Berrien County in February, it is difficult to determine if Doglan's sighting represents a spring migrant or an overwintering individual.

Northern cardinals and tufted titmouse are two common songbirds that spend the entire year in Southwest Michigan. Males of these species often begin singing on clear, brisk mornings in February. In doing so, they set up potential nesting territory and attract a mate. I have heard

FISHING REPORT

Southwest Lower Peninsula

While some lakes had a little ice, there was no safe ice, especially in the southern areas. Any remaining ice that refreezes will be questionable, as the thickness may not be uniform. Anglers should use extreme caution.

St. Joseph: Anglers were taking limit catches of coho salmon when the weather permits. Spawn bags fished on the bottom between the pier heads worked well as did trolling small spoons and plugs around the piers and along the beach.

St. Joseph River: The steelhead action had picked up.

Kalamazoo River: Steelhead action had picked up here as well. Those fishing up near the Allegan Dam caught steelhead and the occasional walleye.

Grand River near Grand Rapids: Steelhead moved in during the last warm spell. Fish were caught on jigs with wax worms, spawn and beads. Use bright-colored jigs up near the dam. Those fishing off the wall and Fulton Street have found some walleye. Steelhead have been caught in the Rogue River as well when using jigs with wax worms, spawn or beads. Darker colors work better in the Rogue.

Muskegon Lake: Had shoreline ice about 100 yards out, but the rest of the lake was open water. On the east end, pike were taken through the ice near Fisherman's Landing. On the far west end, panfish were caught in Snug Harbor.

White River: Boat anglers were getting steelhead near the Taylor Bridge and downstream.

GREEN

also raise property values through their natural beauty and provide basic ecological functions like soaking up and cleaning stormwater.

Having nature in our lives, even in small amounts, has value. Instead of thinking of natural spaces as places to visit only on weekends, it might be helpful to bring some into our lives each day.

We need green

The most beneficial and recognizable green space is one with trees. We need trees for every aspect of our lives. Caring for natural resources helps ensure that we will have healthy forests for clean air and water and renewable materials for homes, health products and clothing.

For each tree harvested in Michigan, two are grown in its place. Michigan's forests are certified sustainable by two independent organizations, the Sustainable Forestry Initiative and the Forest Stewardship Council.

Their logos on product labels let consumers know that the forests used to make these products were managed responsibly. Auditors annually visit the state forests for a checkup to make sure forestry practices are up to certification standards.

Forests also cultivate another type of green – the economic boost that comes from a thriving industry. Michigan's forestry industry contributes $21 billion annually to our state's economy and supports nearly 100,000 jobs.

How we care for forests – the biggest green spaces

The DNR forestry staff manages the largest state forest system in the lower 48 states.

Responsible forest management, using tools like prescribed burns, tree planting and strategic cutting, supports healthy habitats for wildlife.

Although at first it may seem counterproductive to maintaining green space, cutting trees creates specific types of habitat, replaces trees that have reached their lifespan and removes trees damaged by insects or disease.

For example, through selective cutting, clear-cutting and planting anew, foresters have ensured that Michigan's elk herd has the right mix of deep forest and open-space habitat to thrive.

A tree farm in Brighton shows the beginnings of forests for tomorrow.

"Michigan's elk herd lives in a working forest, and commercial timber sales are the primary means we use to achieve wildlife and timber objectives," said Scott Whitcomb, the DNR's senior advisor for wildlife and public lands. "The young forests that grow back after logging are used by many wildlife species including elk, ruffed grouse and golden-winged warblers."

One of the best examples of the benefits of forest management is the dramatic recovery of the Kirtland's warbler.

After habitat decline and competition from brown-headed cowbirds landed the small songbird on the endangered species list in the 1960s, forest managers from the DNR and the U.S. Forest Service worked together to restore the warbler's favored habitat.

Old trees were cut and replaced with wavy lines of young jack pines for the warblers to nest in. The trees will continue to be replaced as they grow too large for suitable nesting habitat.

The Kirtland's warbler population, which is situated largely in Michigan, has grown from a low of 400 a few decades ago to about 4,000. In October, birdwatchers and conservationists celebrated the warbler's removal from the endangered species list.

Now, the warbler is instead being added to the life lists of birders from across the globe who can thank foresters and wildlife biologists for the opportunity.

"Perhaps one of the best components of the Kirtland's warbler conservation success story is how addressing endangerment was not done in a siloed fashion – it was done collaboratively and with the essential elements and guidelines of ecology in mind," said Michigan Audubon Executive Director Heather Good. "The degree to which forest management priorities were dedicated to responding to, supporting and sustaining the recovery of the Kirtland's warbler is truly remarkable and absolutely necessary to seeing the recovery that we've seen with this bird."

Like tree cutting, prescribed burning may seem destructive, but these fires mimic natural processes essential for new growth. Within a year of a burn, scorched ground blooms with new life and becomes a prime area for mushroom hunting and wildlife watching.

Burns regenerate prairie plants, remove invasive species and provide essential assistance for jack pine trees, whose pinecones only open and release seeds in extreme heat.

The thumbnail-sized, endangered Karner blue butterfly also benefits from prescribed burns through its relationship with the wild lupine, a spiky, fire-loving prairie plant related to peas. The butterflies lay their eggs on or near lupine plants, and their caterpillars feed only on lupine leaves and flowers.

Trained DNR staff members conduct prescribed burns on about 7,000 acres of state land annually.

In addition to its work in state forests, the DNR is also investing in urban green spaces.

Tree-planting grants and partnerships with organizations like the Arbor Day Foundation and ReLeaf Michigan have helped increase the number of trees planted and maintained in communities throughout the state.

Education efforts also are helping communities keep their green spaces resilient and healthy. In 2017, a prescribed burn was conducted right on Detroit's riverfront, renewing habitat at Milliken State Park and showcasing the ways we can bring nature close to home.

Responsible forest management is ensuring that people and wildlife can enjoy the benefits of nature now and into the future.

known primarily for ice-fishing gear, sponsored the event with the Devils Lake Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Next day after a warm continental breakfast at the Cobblestone Hotel & Suites, we drove out on the ice. I rode with Tanner Cherney and Suzie Kenner of the CVB in the back seat of Tanner's Jeep. We led a caravan of five pickups, one with a trailer that housed a bunch of Clam portable ice-fishing shelters. It was a little creepy for this Michigander to be on ice in a Jeep, but those fears soon disappeared. The ice was at least two feet thick, yet easily cut through with Clam augers that were powered by a standard rechargeable drill.

First target was walleyes in shallow, 17-foot depths on the edge of a break into water about 45 feet deep. I ended up by myself in a two-person, folding shanty with seats so comfortable I'd set the thing up in my living room to watch TV.

Within 10 minutes of dropping my line down the hole I heard someone in a nearby shelter exclaim they had caught a walleye. And then I felt a bite, set the hook and reeled in a walleye of about 11 inches, which is a keeper on Devils Lake where there is no minimum size limit. It had eaten the Jointed Pinhead Jigging Mino I'd sweetened with a real minnow head. I let it go and caught my second walleye, which could have been the same one, about two hours later. Our group kept about 15 walleyes, releasing quite a few, before we drove out to deeper water for perch.

This is where my bad luck at ice fishing really shone brightly. Dean Cushman, a charter captain, writer and principal in the Teachin' Fishin' organization, joined me in the same two-man shelter. I'd tied on a Clam Drop-Kick, a compact, tungsten ice jig heavy enough to feel when jigging it in about 45 feet of water. Dean used a Hali Jig, a Finnish import with a small, fish-shaped spoon and about two inches of super-thin chain attached to a hook. We baited up with wax worms.

We both had Vexilar sonar flashers, and could watch fish appear as thick red bands near our baits on the sonars' round displays. A couple of them, nice-sized perch, snapped up Dean's offering. My Vexilar showed several looking long and hard at my Drop-Kick without so much as nipping it.

That night we went to the Woodland Resort for dinner in the bar, surrounded by other ice anglers. In the resorts impressive store, I found a Hali jig similar to Dean's in a bargain bin (three lures for five bucks) and bought it.

Next day after briefly trying for walleyes in a different part of the lake, I fished with Roy Heilman, a writer and new AGLOW member who I'd met the day before. Woodland graciously let our group use several of the resort's heated, comfortable shelters. Roy used a Drop-Kick, same size and same "glow red" color as the one I'd used without a nibble the day before. I tried the Hali that had worked for Dean. And Roy caught four jumbo perch before I had a bite. I switched back to the Drop-Kick and finally caught a couple of nice perch just before it was time to call it a day.

If you miss ice fishing in the course of our so-called winter, a trip to Devils Lake will be fun and fulfilling. Check out the CVB's website at devilslakend.com.

ACADEMY AWARDS PREDICTIONS

Chris Pizzello / AP

A REEL RACE

Tony Wittkowski

What a year it's been for cinema connoisseurs. Moviegoers were witness to the culmination of a decade's worth of Marvel superhero movies (RIP Iron Man), a box-office record was broken by Disney, Rian Johnson found his footing with "Knives Out," horror movies continued their surge in popularity ("Us" and "Midsommar") and Netflix landed two Oscar-nominated films.

The 92nd Academy Awards are Sunday, and I'm curious to see if there are some upsets.

That might be difficult, though, considering how many heavy hitters there are this year. A handful of films have scooped up multiple nominations.

Among the 2020 Oscar nominees, "Joker" received the most nominations with 11, including nominations for Best Picture, Actor in a Leading Role, and Directing.

Other films with multiple nominations include "The Irishman," "1917" and "Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood" with 10 nominations and "Jojo Rabbit," "Little Women," "Marriage Story" and "Parasite" with six.

François Duhamel / Universal Pictures / AP

NOMINEES: "The Irishman," "1917," "Little Women," "Ford v Ferrari," "Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood," "Jojo Rabbit," "Marriage Story," "Joker" and "Parasite"

"The Irishman" is a story of a mob hit man and his familiarity with Jimmy Hoffa. The movie does have support from all the key areas – editing, writing, acting and directing. However, I consider it unlikely to nab Best Picture due to its slow pace and lengthy runtime. Plus, it doesn't stack up well compared to Scorsese's other work.

"1917" focuses on two British soldiers during World War I, who are tasked with delivering a message into enemy territory. It's already won the Producers' Guild of America award, plus the Golden Globe for Best Drama. A very impressively-made film for sure, but it places spectacle and technicality above everything else.

"Little Women" is the movie that's based on the book that's based on the story of the March sisters – four young women each determined to live life on their own terms. Unfortunately, there doesn't seem to be enough love behind this movie. This is the seventh film adaption of Louisa May Alcott's book. I'm thinking a more original movie deserves the top prize.

"Ford v Ferrari" has fast cars and big names headlining the picture. And no, it's not in the "Fast and the Furious" movieverse. With only three other nominations, this feels like a bit of a filler film in the lineup of nominees. The movie was enjoyable, but could have been left off the list.

Neon / TNS

"Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood" is essentially a bromance between Leonardo DiCaprio and Brad Pitt who throw a wrench into the Manson family's plans toward the end of the film. It won the Golden Globe for Best Comedy or Musical, and has a lot of support around it. There's a feeling this may be Tarantino's best chance to win. It's not among his best films and is the director's love letter to cinema.

"Jojo Rabbit" is a tale of a young boy in Nazi Germany who has Hitler as an imaginary friend. Oh, and his mother is hiding a Jewish girl in their home. It's a divisive film among voters and likely won't win. It's a memorable film that will stand the test of time. It's unlike any other film this year and has a lot of heart. One of my favorites this year.

"Marriage Story" is a great film that looks at the brutality of divorce, and a not-so-great film for a first date. It may not be many people's No. 1 choice, but a film wins Best Picture by getting consistent No. 2 and No. 3 votes. However, it's still a Netflix film, and some voters hate that. I've heard comparisons of this movie being a modern version of "Kramer vs. Kramer."

"Parasite" follows an unemployed family that takes an interest in a wealthy family, as they ingratiate themselves into their lives and get mixed up in an unexpected incident. It's loved by everyone who has seen it and just won the SAG award for Best Ensemble, a vital Oscar precursor. Something to keep in mind – no foreign language film has ever won this award.

"Joker" is centered on Arthur Fleck, who takes on his alter-ego in Gotham City after repeated instances of being disregarded and mistreated. This movie is a long shot to win Best Picture since it is technically a comic book movie – despite what Todd Phillips might say. Many critics liken this film to Scorsese's "Taxi Driver," but I don't see it having the same impact among voters.

WILL WIN: "1917" is favored to win. I think the voting is skewed based on the film's technicality and the critics' fascination with war epics. It's focus is linear and has a simple plot for viewers.

SHOULD WIN: "Parasite" has been making history. It was the first South Korean movie to win the Palme d'Or at the Cannes Film Festival and the first foreign language movie to win the Screen Actors Guild Award for best cast in a motion picture. For all the hype, it's well worth the award.

ACTOR IN A LEADING ROLE

NOMINEES: Antonio Banderas ("Pain and Glory"), Leonardo DiCaprio ("Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood"), Adam Driver ("Marriage Story"), Joaquin Phoenix ("Joker") and Jonathan Pryce ("The Two Popes")

DRIVER

WILL WIN: Joaquin Phoenix is the front runner and likely winner. Once again he undertook a drastic body transformation and is perhaps the biggest reason "Joker" has received so many nominations.

SHOULD WIN: Two words. Adam. Driver. He was my pick to win Best Supporting Actor last year (which he didn't). He's had an impressive run the past two years and deserves a golden statue for his portrayal of a man who you find yourself cheering for and disliking at the same time in "Marriage Story."

ACTRESS IN A LEADING ROLE

ZELLWEGER

RONAN

WILL WIN: It's going to be someone who portrayed a person in real-life. That's my way of saying it's either going to be Zellweger for her performance as the late actress Judy Garland or Erivo as American abolitionist Harriet Tubman. The edge here goes to Zellweger.

SHOULD WIN: I have to admit favoritism here. Saoirse Ronan was captivating to watch and makes for a great pairing with director Greta Gerwig. She missed out with a wonderful performance in "Lady Bird" last year, and I hope she doesn't again for her role in "Little Women."

ACTOR IN A SUPPORTING ROLE

NOMINEES: Tom Hanks ("A Beautiful Day In The Neighborhood"), Anthony Hopkins ("The Two Popes"), Al Pacino ("The Irishman"), Joe Pesci ("The Irishman") and Brad Pitt ("Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood")

PITT

WILL WIN: Brad Pitt's been nominated in acting categories three times and keeps coming up short. A case can be made he's building an overdue narrative, especially when one considers his great turns that weren't nominated for Oscars.

SHOULD WIN: This is Pitt's award to lose. He was the best part of the movie and mostly outshone DiCaprio when the two heavy hitters shared the screen.

ACTRESS IN A SUPPORTING ROLE

DERN

WILL WIN: Laura Dern. Her callous portrayal of a divorce attorney was impressive and proved to be a lightning rod for some of the viewer's frustration with the married couple.

SHOULD WIN: Dern deserves it. I'm torn on Johansson's performance for her role in "Jojo Rabbit," but Dern edges her out.

DIRECTING

NOMINEES: Martin Scorsese ("The Irishman"), Todd Phillips ("Joker"), Sam Mendes ("1917"), Quentin Tarantino ("Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood") and Bong Joon Ho ("Parasite")

MENDES

JOON-HO

WILL WIN: This is the most stacked category outside of Best Picture. You have the heavy weights (Scorsese and Tarantino). But I have Sam Mendes winning it. The way "1917" was made and shot as one continuous cut was difficult and I think voters will recognize that effort.

SHOULD WIN: Bong Joon Ho has called out the American moviegoing public's aversion to subtitles. His efforts would go a long way with a Best Director nod.

'Living funerals' simulate death to help re-evaluate life priorities

By DANAE KING
The Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch

Doral Chenoweth III / Columbus Dispatch / TNS

Death doula Donna Baker leads five "living funeral" participants through one segment of the roughly two-hour guided meditation. Covered by shrouds, they are guided through what should feel like the emotions and physical experience of dying, and then coming back to life.

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Kristen Slangerup has heard about people getting a new perspective on life after a near-death experience.

For the 36-year-old Dublin, Ohio, resident, a living funeral came as close as possible to getting that experience, without the danger and trauma.

Slangerup attended a "living," or mock, funeral hosted by local death doula Donna Baker during her birthday-weekend celebrations in August.

"It was a great way to come into my 36th year, feeling alive and not taking anything for granted," Slangerup said.

Living funerals, first conducted in South Korea in an effort to prevent suicides by helping people to see the value of their lives, are growing in popularity in the United States.

The roughly two-hour guided meditation hosted by Baker starts with participants writing last words to loved ones and reading them aloud to a handful of other participants if they so choose. They then lie down, and a shroud is placed over them as they are guided through what should feel like the emotions and physical experience of dying, and then coming back to life.

"Let yourself be pressed down by the weight of death," she said. "Lay still, relax. ... There's no longer anything for you to do but listen to my voice and imagine you're dying."

Once she led participants through a simulation of their physical body dying, she guided them through losing their consciousness.

"Imagine that this consciousness inside you is shrinking," she said. "You now become completely inert, it's time to guide your mind to a quiet place. ... Just say to yourself, 'Yes, I am dying.'"

Baker was partly inspired to begin hosting the ceremonies last summer after hearing about others' near-death experiences. Death doulas such as Baker help people at the end of their life with the process of dying, much as birth doulas help at the beginning of life.

"I just always thought, I wonder if we could sort of re-create that awakening where you feel like you're done or you've lost everything, or you feel like you've died and been brought back to life," said Baker, who founded her private service, Columbus Community Deathcare, in March. "Can we get into the mood where you can have a wake-up call without experiencing that trauma?"

Although contemplating mortality is a large part of the living funerals, those who host them say they are much more about living – and making the most out of life.

Death doula Emily Cross, founder of Steady Waves End of Life Services in Austin, Texas, searched for people hosting living-funeral ceremonies in the U.S. after hearing about the practice in South Korea.

Finding no one, Cross started hosting the ceremonies in Texas in 2017. Now, she trains others to be hosts. Baker is among 13 she has trained, and Cross is teaching four more.

Cross said she does it because she thinks contemplating mortality in a serious way is rare, but important.

"You hear quotes all the time like, 'Live like it's your last day' or 'You only live once,' but to sit down and look at your memorial photograph as if you're already gone and writing your last words, it's a different experience," she said. "I think it creates this impetus to live in alignment with your values and your ethics and your hopes and dreams, to feel deeply that it is all temporary."

Baker said she has heard a variety of responses from participants. One woman decided she was going to leave her husband after the ceremony. Another man got so choked up that he couldn't finish reading his final thoughts. He later decided to use what he had written as his actual final words, so he put them with his will.

"It's not a morbid workshop; it's not a mournful experience; it's hard, but looking at your life in a really honest and deep way is hard," Baker said.

One goal is to make death become part of life and not a crisis.

Baker hopes that people leave the ceremony with a fresh start or perspective and the added benefit of having thought about their death long before most people do.

Most of those who attend Baker's ceremonies aren't approaching death but are young, healthy people who want to think about death.

For Slangerup, reading her final words aloud was cathartic, and, the experience helped her reprioritize her life.

When she "came back to life" during the exercise, Slangerup was overcome with gratefulness to be alive – so much so that she has recommended the living funeral to friends.

"You don't get a second chance at life," Slangerup said, "so it's the closest you can come to that experience of 'How would I live my life differently if I could do it over again?'"

So you say there's nothing to do here in the winter? I disagree

Snow and a toboggan plus grandkids and a fast hill on a sunny January day equals great memories – and a recipe for making new friends.

There's nothing like a toboggan ride down a steep winding hill to bring memories of wintertime joy from your childhood back into clear focus: squeals of delight mixed with more than a tiny bit of fear, wind in your face, snow powder whizzing by. It's like flying without wings.

There's also nothing like the sudden thud of your backside hitting the icy ground after the toboggan takes a flying leap over a large mogul to remind you that those childhood memories were made many decades ago. Older bones don't bounce like they used to.

On that recent sunny afternoon, two grandkids and I packed up our shiny new toboggan and trudged up a hill at the back of a local park and let the fun begin.

Christine Vanlandingham
Generations

People who bemoan that there's nothing to do here in the winter, that kids are only interested in electronic devices, or that youngsters don't know how to just get outside and play to entertain themselves, should head to a local park on such a fine winter's day.

There were about two dozen other souls ranging in age from preschool to older adulthood there that afternoon. Some people were from the neighborhood, others from far off places. At least three languages were spoken on the hill that day, but the laughter was all the same.

It didn't matter that we were of widely varied ages, from different countries and socioeconomic backgrounds or if we were traveling down the hill on spiffy new sleds, beat up metal saucers or a piece of plastic-coated cardboard. We were all in the thrill together.

We lent our toboggan to several groups who wanted to give the long wooden sled a try, and in turn, we took zippy rides down the hill on small saucers lent to us and experienced a different kind of trip down the hill. Flying solo was a thrill.

It could have easily been a sunny January day from my childhood in the 1960s. Or from my parents' childhood in the 1930s and '40s.

While family and community life have changed in many ways since those days, in other quite important ways it has stayed the same.

Community still matters. We all left the hill with new friends, lungs full of fresh air and hearts full of sweet memories. We're all richer, and likely healthier, for the connections made that day.

Fun can still be free. No admission charge, no batteries or Wi-Fi hotspot connections were needed. Just an adventurous spirit and a willingness to relinquish control to the laws of gravity.

A willingness to laugh at yourself when the ride doesn't go as planned was also key. Bruised knees, elbows and perhaps bruised tailbones, yes, but no bruised egos allowed. We all skidded off track at one point or another on our trips down the hill.

There's joy in rooting for others. For those not able to wiz down the hill, just as much fun was available to the cheering section as they vicariously enjoyed the fun from the bottom of the hill. Hugs, high-fives and hot chocolate were just as welcomed by the kids as the adults observing the fun.

Whether you're a parent with couch-bound kids, a teenager bored with "nothing to do," or a senior with or without local grandkids to spoil, this free entertainment is yours for the enjoying.

Not up for trekking out to the hills? Observing the antics of others at local outdoor ice arenas, walking nature trails or gazing from the inside of local nature centers' observation windows all allow nature to nurture your soul in a community setting this winter.

But if you are up for a ride, especially a nostalgic ride on a wooden toboggan, meet me at the top of the park hill some sunny winter afternoon. I'll be the one with snow on my backside from downhill slide-offs, a silly grin on my face from the fun, and an open heart ready to welcome new friends to the winter-time-fun circle.

The dismantling of political parties

Jonah Goldberg

One of my favorite running jokes on the internet is, "You had one job." It's a staple of Twitter and YouTube, with images of signs reading, "Turn Left" with an arrow pointing right, or supermarket shelves demarcating where you can buy "Poop Tarts."

Well, the Iowa Democratic Party rolled out a new line of Poop Tarts this week.

The Iowa Democratic Party may have other responsibilities in nonpresidential election years, but it's only important function every four years is to run the Iowa caucuses. It's the only time the eyes of the nation are on it, and the eyes of the nation this week saw a screw-up of biblical proportions. It was like watching a team put screen doors on a submarine and confidently take it out to sea, even though they'd been warned from the beginning that screen doors are a bad idea.

There's no point in dwelling on the full scope of the failure – they used a faulty app to count votes that they were told in advance was faulty – and then had to manually recheck the votes. It took longer to recheck than it would have taken if they had used technology that was readily available in the 16th century.

And rather than just wait until they had a final tally, they released the tabulations piecemeal, making it possible for different candidates to claim victory based on partial results. Worse, they even got the recheck numbers wrong at one point and had to issue corrections.

It was like a surgeon who accidentally leaves a sponge in a patient's abdomen and then, in an effort to remedy the situation, takes too long going back in only to remove a kidney by mistake.

Why did it happen? One answer is that the Iowa Democratic Party forgot it had one job – to run the caucus in a straightforward, transparent and professional manner.

But there's a larger context. One of the reasons our politics have become so dysfunctional is that the political parties have, over the last 40 years, systematically dismantled themselves, or to be more fair, cooperated with the politicians, activists and journalists who sought to dismantle them.

Subscribing to a misplaced fetishization of democracy in all things, they completely outsourced the responsibility of choosing their candidates to the parties' most passionate voters – something virtually no other advanced democracy has done. All in the name of reform, they acquiesced to rules and laws that took power away from the parties and put it in the hands of outside groups, donors, the media and, again, primary voters.

They embraced the cultural mantra "Who are we to judge?" and turned the parties into a "vehicle that anyone can drive" in the words of Amy Walter of the Cook Political Report.

The new rules that Iowa enacted for 2020 were forced upon it by Sen. Bernie Sanders, a man who proudly insists he's not a Democrat, save for purposes of running for president. Those rules were so arcane and ridiculous that a state party infrastructure that only knew how to do one thing couldn't cope with the demand to do something else.

The ongoing transformation of the GOP into a proudly nationalist and protectionist party in the image of Donald Trump is merely another facet of the same problem. Parties always cared about winning the next election; that's one reason they exist. But it's not the only reason they exist. They are also institutions that stand for certain ideas and interests that are more enduring than the just the next election. Or at least they used to be.

That meant they understood the need to police their own, to enforce compliance with certain policies and certain norms that contributed to the long-term health of the institution. Now, partisanship has been outsourced to the angriest voices and the media outlets who make money from them, leaving the parties as brands that can't tell their customers anything they don't want to hear.

When Richard Nixon resigned in disgrace, it wasn't because he wanted to, but because the Republican Party essentially told him he had to go.

Today's GOP would never tell Trump he's got to go, but not just because they don't think he should or because they know Trump wouldn't leave. They wouldn't because the GOP has become a vehicle that anyone can drive, and the president is in the driver's seat.

Should Sanders succeed in his hostile takeover of the Democratic Party, you can be sure that the Democratic Party will become as much of a Sanders party as today's GOP is a Trump party. Because they only have one job now, to stand for whatever the person in the driver's seat tells them to stand for.

Second Amendment sanctuary is a bad idea

Editor,

As the Berrien County Board of Commissioners considers declaring our county a Second Amendment "sanctuary," I hope that they take the entire United States Constitution into consideration, and value its entire protection. In doing so, I am certain that they will see that the Constitution itself stands in the way of taking up this well intentioned, but still misguided pursuit.

As a proud American, I strongly defend the Second Amendment rights of those who want to own guns, as strongly as I defend the First Amendment rights of those who wish to practice a religion different from mine, and as strongly as I defend the Fourth Amendment rights of all against unreasonable search and seizure.

In fact, I support the entire Constitution (maybe not the 18th Amendment, but we took care of that with the 21st). And as such, I cannot, and in fact patriotism and logic cannot, support any "sanctuary" bills, proposals or laws that work to nullify laws passed by other authorities. The Constitution simply does not grant that right. Our founding Republican President, Lincoln, valued the primacy of the Constitution so much on this issue that he reluctantly led our country into war to defend it.

In the United States, we have clearly defined methods of redress if we dislike laws passed by our various legislative groups: We can take things up through the courts, through lobbying our authorities to change the law, and through the vote, thereby changing our legislature and executive. There is no other level of redress in America. This is the system our Founding Fathers created, we believe in, we fight for, and in which we all, every one of us, should continue to have some faith. Interpretation of the constitutionality of laws is not given to individuals or to local authorities. The Berrien County commissioners simply don't have the ability to nullify any laws they themselves find offensive to the Constitution.

And so, if you agree with and want to defend the Constitution, then you know that you cannot defend only the parts you worry about. It's all or nothing. Working to declare Berrien County a Second Amendment sanctuary is, unfortunately, working against the separation of powers outlined in the Constitution, in the writings of our Founding Fathers, and in the 200 years of interpretation by our loyal, and very often wise forefathers.

In the end, I understand a little bit why some push for this sanctuary status, but I sincerely wish that they loved our country enough to have some faith in it. I would beg them to please defend the Second Amendment. It is important. But also, to please defend the entire Constitution. Our Constitution is strong enough to withstand occasional bad laws, bad legislators, bad executives, and bad judges. But the Constitution has worked, and will continue to work, only if we strengthen it by operating within its bounds and intents, not by trying to work around it.

No, Trump is not going to be a dictator

Jay Ambrose

Maybe the most ridiculous if also the most common progressive complaint about Republicans refusing to impeach President Donald Trump is that he now really, truly will see himself as king, that he will behave like a dictator, that he will know he can get away with anything. What's more, it's said, future presidents will figure on indulging in the same privileges, Congress will be a nothing branch of government, the Constitution will be meaningless and the rule of law will fear to ever enter the Oval Office.

I see this as wrong in several respects and intend to list them. First, let's consider the fact that Trump is maybe the most closely watched president in the history of the country. A book and countless commentaries and news stories have told us how staffers surrounding him on a daily basis don't trust him and try to hem him in. It almost seems like every other person in the White House leaks classified material that could damage him and maybe the nation. In the latest impeachment quest, officials who listen into his phone calls ratted on him to someone who then mistakenly called himself a whistleblower.

Second, we come to something that also intervenes with the supposed boss, namely the administrative state, the bureaucracy that is awfully close in some respects to being the real government of the United States, whoever the president is or whatever Congress does. Here we have people who can sometimes get away with ignoring the president or doing the opposite of what he wants or at least muddling up the implementation.

This is nothing new. It got going with great energy under President Woodrow Wilson, who thought technocrats and intellectuals had all the answers, especially himself. The new way of things was solidified by Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal. Both of these presidents did some pretty horrible things, by the way: Wilson helped get a political opponent imprisoned as he quelled free speech and FDR stuck American citizens in detention centers for the crime of Japanese heritage.

The great tool of the administrative state is regulations. Some are necessary, of course, but they should be limited and Congress should review them. We now have so many no one can count them and President Barack Obama, far more an autocrat than Trump, loved them as much as executive orders. He set records in the writing of major ones and Trump set records in reducing their number. Congress, which let the regulation overkill happen, has gotten a little more attentive to the issue but its legislative control remains a fraction of what it should be. One Democratic presidential candidate, Elizabeth Warren, helped set up a massively interventionist consumer finance agency that got its money from the Federal Reserve, meaning that, when it came to oversight, Congress had no power of the purse.

Courts have the muscle to stymie presidential overreach, and Obama set another record as the Supreme Court kept saying sorry, but you're not getting away with that. Lower federal courts have gone after Trump with a vengeance that too often has had more to do with politics than the law. Here is another means by which his power is limited, if unconstitutionally. One of his greatest achievements, however, is to have given us a bunch of judges who actually believe in the Constitution, both on the Supreme Court and lower courts. It is also said that he has abused executive privilege, but understand that here is a right as precious in many ways as Congress's right to impeach, and courts could have decided the matter.

Understand finally that Democrats in Congress are in no way going to start taking it easy on Trump, looking the other way if they smell something funny. They will come at him on every other move he makes, as will CNN, MSNBC, The New York Times, The Washington Post and other aggressive media players that are not about to grow timid because their sense of righteousness has been assaulted. Trump himself may have at last learned a lesson, that you have to stop and listen and learn from others and try to avoid carelessness.

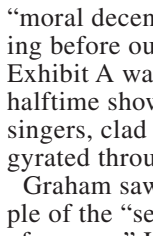
Why is it always sex?

Leonard Pitts



Certainly, if it's moral failures you're after, you can take your pick.

Just last weekend, after all, Republican senators finally admitted that Donald Trump is guilty of the offenses for which he was impeached. They conceded this as they prepared to acquit him. Sen. Lamar Alexander assured us the president learned his lesson and won't do it again. This, even though he once obstructed justice while being accused of obstructing justice.

Meantime Trump, who has made black athletes' supposed disrespect for the national anthem a signature issue, demonstrated his own deep respect as the song was being performed prior to the Super Bowl. He goofed around and fidgeted like a 2-year-old on a caffeine high while the grown-ups stood solemnly, hands over their hearts.

Such affronts to what is proper and right are ubiquitous in the Trump years. So naturally, a prominent man of God decided on Sunday that he'd had enough and pronounced himself morally offended.

By Jennifer Lopez's backside.

Or maybe it was her frontside. Or it could have been Shakira's backside or frontside. He wasn't really specific. All we know for sure is that the evangelist Franklin Graham took to social media to declare that our sense of "moral decency" is "disappearing before our eyes" and that his Exhibit A was the Super Bowl halftime show in which the two singers, clad in skimpy outfits, gyrated through a hits medley.

Graham saw this as an example of the "sexual exploitation of women." He declared himself "disappointed" in the NFL and in Pepsi, which sponsored the show.

And here, let us point out the obvious. Namely, that Graham's professed concern about the sexual exploitation of women is, shall we say, inconsistent with his lockstep support of Trump, an adulterer, a consort of porn stars, a credibly accused sex criminal who once exhorted voters to turn out for a credibly accused child molester and a man whose most famous quote is a boast about grabbing women's vaginas without invitation or permission.

Consider it superfluous proof that the right wing has gone hypocrisy blind.

But again, that's the obvious part. Here's the less obvious part: Why is it always sex? Why is it that conservatives only ever see a moral dimension, cause for moral indignation, in the evocation of this most natural and common of human activities?

Beg pardon, but is it not a moral concern when you rip babies from parents' arms? When the planet burns? When hate crimes spike? When government steals ballots – and thus, voices – from vulnerable voters?

You'd think these would be moral issues, yet somehow, the right never frames them as such. Congress robs the poor to give to the rich, people are sick because being healthy costs too much, a black man in Mississippi is doing 12 years for possession of a cellphone … and there is nary a flicker of indignation from the likes of Graham. But let a barely sheathed buttock flicker across his screen, and he's apoplectic?

Lord, have mercy.

No, seriously, Lord. Have mercy.

Because, increasingly, this is not only a nation with no moral direction, but a nation that has no idea what being moral even looks like. Which is a sad crossroads for a people who once saw themselves as the embodiment – imperfect, to be sure – of all in the human experience that was brave and good and hopeful and aspirational and compassionate and free and right. And Graham is "disappointed?"

Join the club.

Boyfriend's prison record opens him up to judgment

DEAR ABBY: I have never been in love before, and I have just learned the man I'm seeing is a former felon. It was nothing having to do with sexual violence or killing anyone. I'm afraid if my family finds out, they will judge him. He works seven days a week and lives in a shelter because most places don't want to rent to felons. He treats me good and takes me out for dinners.

Jeanne Phillips
Dear Abby

Maybe I'm stupid for not being judgmental, but he's a good person who has served his time for his crimes, and he's still being punished. Are people like him not allowed to be in love and have families too? – In Love In Nebraska

DEAR IN LOVE: People make mistakes. People "like him" also fall in love, marry and have families. While there is bias against individuals with prison records, the fact that they served time does not guarantee they can't go on to live successful lives after their release. Explain that to your family, and suggest they take the time to get to know him before jumping to conclusions and making any final judgments.

DEAR ABBY: I've always been sensitive, but it has gotten worse since I became a mom a year ago. I dread watching or reading the news for fear of seeing a child, parent or animal has been hurt or mistreated. I'm a religious person, and I find myself asking God why bad things happen.

I know the tragic stories tend to make the headlines, but how would you suggest I learn to still see the good in the world? I can't quit seeing the news. We are inundated. I just wish the negativity of the world didn't get to me like it does. Advice, Abby? – Super Sensitive In Kentucky

DEAR SUPER SENSITIVE: That you have recently become a mother and are responsible for a helpless little person may have something to do with your feelings. But please don't judge the whole world or the people in it by the horror stories featured in the headlines, because they are misleading. Many people do positive things to help their neighbors and their communities that don't make the news. Consequently, we hear less about them.

I combat feelings like those you are experiencing by taking a "vacation" from reading or watching the news for a few days or a week when I think it is affecting me emotionally. I suggest you try it. Also, while your schedule as a new mother may be a busy one, if you can make the time, consider volunteering at your local library or a senior citizens' center. If you do, it may help you feel less helpless, knowing you are not only doing something positive but also making a significant difference in someone else's life.

DEAR ABBY: I have been retired for a little more than a year, and I enjoy it, except for one problem. My husband seems to think that since I'm home, I should be constantly busy – cleaning, cooking, doing SOMETHING. He accuses me of being lazy. I think he may be jealous that I don't work anymore. What do you think? – Retiree In Georgia

DEAR RETIREE: I think you may have hit the nail on the head. Things might improve if you tell him less often how much you're enjoying it.

Nervous about introducing my married boyfriend to my parents

Adapted from a recent online discussion.

DEAR CAROLYN: My parents were both married to other people when they got together, a fact they have always been open about with me. (They had no choice, I suppose, since I have a half sibling who is less than a year older than I am.) Their message has always been that true love is worth fighting for, which I definitely agree with.

Carolyn Hax

And yet, I am nervous to the point of paralysis about introducing them to my boyfriend, who happens to be married with a small child. He and his wife will probably divorce soon – there are financial and legal complications – and our commitment to each other is real, and yet it's still a rather embarrassing situation for me to be in.

How do you suggest I tackle this with my parents, who are both sensible people with real insight into this sort of thing, but who will probably also have very tough questions for me? – Nervous

Introduce them to the boyfriend and answer the tough questions.

What better way than meeting the family to spot the difference between what is real, and what we're just telling ourselves is real?

(For those who don't have family like this to lean on, substitute a reasonably objective third party who loves you and knows you well.)

DEAR CAROLYN: My sister and I are open with each other. This year we got a frightening tax bill and I vented to her. She was sympathetic but didn't commiserate. I found this a little strange given what I know about her finances.

It bugged me enough to ask her how much she owes, and she said she was getting a refund but wouldn't say how much. I was floored. I asked her for more details, including who she used for tax prep, and she refused to divulge them. I am jealous she is paying a lot less and also concerned if what she's doing is even legal. Can I bring this up to her again? And how do I do that? – Bugged

Getting a refund doesn't mean she's "paying a lot less." It just means she withheld or prepaid more than she needed to cover her obligation. Her tax bill could be twice what you're paying and still involve a refund.

And no, you can't bring this up to her again, not without stirring a pot you never had any business stirring and that serves no purpose in being stirred.

I am sorry about your scary tax bill. When there are a lot of changes to the tax code, a lot of people base their withholding on outdated information and end up withholding either too much or too little – and that can lead to surprises. Again, the size of the refund is about how much you paid in advance, not what you pay overall.

Re: Taxes:

They're open with each other, but Bugged's immediate response is jealousy and suspicion? Bugged ought to try to approach her sister with a little more charity. (Which might even be deductible.) – Charitable

I see what you did there.

Re: Taxes:

You and your sister may be open with each other, but she is drawing a boundary here. Respect it. – Anonymous

Bruce Dickinson, who is best known as the lead singer for the heavy metal band Iron Maiden, said, "One of my earliest ventures was when I was 9 years old. I realized there was a shortage of pencils at school, so I started Rent-a-Pencil. But I made a fundamental mistake. Everybody stole my pencils."

Declarer should always try not to have any of his tricks stolen by the defenders. In today's deal, how should South play in three no-trump after West leads the heart queen?

South's opening bid is close. But these days, most players, liking the full complement of aces, would open two no-trump. If you are going to make this upgrade, make sure that your hand contains at least three aces and one king or two aces and three kings.

Declarer starts with five top tricks outside of clubs (two spades, two hearts and one diamond), so needs four winners from the lowest-ranking suit. But how should he proceed?

If clubs are 2-2 or 3-1, everything sensible works. But what if they are 4-0?

If West has four, cashing the club ace first is fine. But that is not the case when East has all of them.

South must realize that this is not a finessing position. Instead, he should win trick one (don't risk a diamond shift) and lead a low club toward the board.

When West discards, declarer plays dummy's jack. East takes the trick and returns a heart (or the diamond king). South wins, plays a spade to the king, returns a club to his nine, cashes the club ace, runs the suit and pencils plus 600 into his scorecard.

Jocelyn Noveck
Movie Review

Claudette Barius / Warner Bros. Pictures / AP

At one point in "Birds of Prey," crime lord Roman Sionis, aka Ewan McGregor, sits down with a tub of popcorn to watch Harley Quinn suffer through a brutal interrogation.

He's a psychopath – well, so is Harley, for that matter – but Roman has the right idea. As portrayed by the effortlessly charismatic Margot Robbie, Harley's always gonna be the most interesting person in the room – or on the screen. Grab your popcorn, indeed.

Robbie is certainly killing it these days, and we're not just talking about the escalating body count (especially if you include violence by glitter gun) in this visually arresting and often clever – if not particularly profound – installment of the DC Extended Universe.

Heartbreaking in "Bombshell" and poignant in "Once Upon a Time ... in Hollywood," Robbie is looking more and more like she can do most anything. And she's a producer here, too, as if being a ginormous movie star at age 29 weren't enough.

But back to "Birds of Prey," or more precisely, "Birds of Prey (And the Fantabulous Emancipation of One Harley Quinn)," an extended title that hints at what Robbie, director Cathy Yan and screenwriter Christina Hodson are trying to do: free Harley once and for all from her ex-boyfriend, that Joker guy, and plant her firmly within a girl gang.

And even though the Joker is all the rage these days, thanks to Joaquin Phoenix in that other movie, Harley proves a worthy subject of her own film, especially with her intriguing background (a Ph.D. and perhaps a medical degree), her broken past, and her "obsessive-compulsive need for attention," in her words.

It's a shame the movie doesn't dig deeper into some of these idiosyncratic intricacies of character – but hey, there's always the sequel.

You don't need much previous knowledge to get up to speed, thanks to a clever animated intro, narrated by Harley (in a less-than-convincing Brooklyn-Gotham accent, it must be said). Born Harleen Quinzel, Harley became a shrink only to fall in love with Mr. J at Arkham, proving once again that advanced degrees are no protection against bad taste in boyfriends.

As the action begins, Harley has been given the boot by her mercurial lover. "I handled it real mature," she notes with sarcasm.

Revenge is topmost on her mind. She decides to blow up the Ace Chemicals Processing Plant, a place important to the Joker, just as some people "have their Eiffel Tower, or their Olive Garden."

Harley quickly learns that a byproduct of her new singledom is that she's no longer shielded by people's fear of the Joker – in other words, everyone she ever slighted is now out to get her. And those slights, we learn in a witty, lightning-quick graphic, include everything from possessing a female reproductive organ to – did we catch this right? – voting for Bernie, presumably against Hillary.

Most dangerously, her new enemies include Roman and his sadistic assistant, Zsasz (Chris Messina). Roman likes to hang people upside down and order their faces scalped off, but in McGregor's wry performance, he's less than terrifying, especially compared to Zsasz who is truly, deeply creepy.

Without going too far into plot here – the movie's title stretched our word count, anyway – let's just quickly mention that things really get going when young pickpocket Cassandra Cain (Ella Jay Basco) steals and then swallows a precious diamond, in which crucial secrets are embedded. Harley offers to get the diamond; otherwise, Roman will kill her.

The other major players, joining forces to fight Roman, are Montoya, a tough Gotham detective (the reliable Rosie Perez); Black Canary, or singer Dinah Lance (a lovely Jurnee Smollett-Bell); and the Huntress, aka Helena Bertinelli (an understated Mary Elizabeth Winstead), a mob daughter bent on avenging her family's killers.

Ultimately it all rides on Robbie, who, along with her blond, color-dipped pigtails, brings an appealing blend of looniness and grit to the role, and a hint of something sadder and darker.

Still, one gets the sense the filmmakers weren't quite sure how far to go with the feminism thing. When she says sadly that "a harlequin's nothing without a master," you don't immediately get the sense that this is a post #MeToo Harley Quinn.

Like we said, there's always the sequel.

OSCARS 2020

Everything you need to know ahead of Sunday's show

By CHRISTI CARRAS
Los Angeles Times

Finish those screeners and lock in your predictions — Oscar Sunday is nearly here.

With the Golden Globes, the SAGs and craft honors in the rear-view mirror, the 2020 race is shaping up to be quite a showdown between more traditional awards darlings (period drama "1917") and history-making entries (South Korean thriller "Parasite").

And though the months leading up to the ceremony have been relatively calm compared to 2019, the motion picture academy still managed to cause an inevitable ruckus by snubbing women and artists of color in major categories and tweeting a confusing sample ballot of winners.

What time is the show, and where can I watch it?

The 92nd Academy Awards will air live from the Dolby Theatre in Los Angeles at 8 p.m. on ABC. While the runtime for the show is about three hours, passionate speeches and other only-on-live-TV variables are likely to stretch the broadcast, so adjust your DVRs accordingly.

A livestream of the program will also be available in select markets on ABC's website and app – accessible only with valid TV provider login credentials.

To achieve full immersion in the day's festivities, viewers can tune in to the preshow, "Oscars Live on the Red Carpet," beginning at 6:30 p.m. on ABC, the ABC website and the ABC app.

"Oscars All Access: Red Carpet Live" will also showcase Hollywood's brightest stars in their Oscars-best starting at 6:30 p.m., via the academy's Twitter account.

No one.

After 2019's host-free experiment merited a ratings spike, ABC Entertainment President Karey Burke told reporters in January that the network planned on "repeating what worked for us last year."

The family-facing platform scrapped the traditional emcee format for the previous ceremony after its initial comedian of choice, Kevin Hart, came under fire after homophobic jokes resurfaced and walked away from the coveted gig.

It comes as no surprise that, in 2020, the network has moved to avoid any potential host-related drama altogether.

What's nominated?

The film academy reignited some familiar criticism after announcing the nominees in 24 categories last month. Todd Phillips' dark comic-book adaptation "Joker" led the field with 11 nominations, including best picture.

While the 2019 Oscar nominees were uncharacteristically diverse, this year's mostly white acting categories have sparked backlash reminiscent of the 2015-16 #OscarsSoWhite controversy. And once again, not a single woman was nominated for director.

"Harriet" star Cynthia Erivo was the only actor of color to receive a nomination in a year that included critically acclaimed performances from Jennifer Lopez ("Hustlers"), Awkwafina ("The Farewell") and the cast of "Parasite."

Despite getting shut out in the acting categories, Bong Joon Ho's South Korean juggernaut scored six Oscar nods, including best picture – a rare feat for an international film.

Sam Mendes' World War I drama, "1917," Martin Scorsese's gangster epic, "The Irishman," and Quentin Tarantino's L.A. love letter, "Once Upon a Time … in Hollywood," also fared well, racking up 10 nominations apiece.

Who's likely to win?

Chang also deemed "Parasite" his "should win" selection, while Turan bestowed that distinction on "Little Women."

Who's performing?

Let the storm rage on! Queen Elsa herself, Idina Menzel, will return to the Oscars telecast six years after she wowed the crowd with her live rendition of "Let It Go," which won the Academy Award for original song in 2014.

This year, she'll sing her "Frozen 2" power ballad, "Into the Unknown," during the ceremony, which will include performances by all five original-song nominees.

Erivo will take the stage with "Stand Up" from "Harriet," Elton John will perform "(I'm Gonna) Love Me Again" from "Rocketman," Chrissy Metz will sing "I'm Standing With You" from "Breakthrough" and Randy Newman will perform "I Can't Let You Throw Yourself Away" from "Toy Story 4."

The broadcast will also feature debut Oscars performances from newly minted Grammy winner Billie Eilish and Grammys veteran Janelle Monáe. While the academy is keeping details about the singer-songwriters' appearances under wraps, Eilish was recently confirmed as the youngest artist in history to record a James Bond theme song for "No Time to Die." Monáe also stars opposite Erivo in "Harriet."

Who's presenting?

The lineup also includes a handful of actors featured in 2020 best picture nominees, such as Zazie Beetz ("Joker"), Taika Waititi ("Jojo Rabbit"), Timothée Chalamet ("Little Women") and George MacKay ("1917").

Rounding out this year's presenters are: Utkarsh Ambudkar, Salma Hayek, Brie Larson, Spike Lee, Ray Romano, Rebel Wilson, James Corden, Penélope Cruz, Beanie Feldstein, Will Ferrell, Gal Gadot, Zack Gottsagen, Mindy Kaling, Diane Keaton, Shia LaBeouf, Julia Louis-Dreyfus, Steve Martin, Lin-Manuel Miranda, Anthony Ramos, Keanu Reeves, Maya Rudolph, Mark Ruffalo, Kelly Marie Tran, Sigourney Weaver, Kristen Wiig, Jane Fonda, Josh Gad, Tom Hanks, Oscar Isaac, Sandra Oh, Natalie Portman and Chris Rock.

Are you eager to sell your house?

Try describing it as 'adorable'

By KATIE PARK
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Neil Lockhart / Dreamstime / TNS
The terms adorable, awesome, gorgeous, historic and luxurious were helpful in boosting a home's property value, researchers found.

"Basement sounds like a dirty old stone basement," said the 20-year real estate agent for ReMax in Bryn Mawr, Pa. "You want to say it has a lower level. It takes a long time to write these descriptions for me. It takes hours because you have to say it exactly right for each house."

Certain words and phrases – and even the number of exclamation points in a property listing!!!!! – can help improve the value of a property and reduce its time on the market, academics found through an analysis of more than 700,000 homes listed and sold over a decade in the Charlotte, N.C., area.

The researchers, Sean Brunson and Richard J. Buttimer Jr. of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, and Steve Swidler, the Hanson/KPMG professor of business and finance at Lafayette College in Easton, Pa., suspected their conclusions would apply to most real estate markets.

The terms adorable, awesome, gorgeous, historic and luxurious were helpful in boosting property value, they found. The bigger the house, the more frequently it was described as beautiful.

Adorable, in particular, could add more than $43,000 to the value of what is often a small, hard-to-sell property, according to the study, "An Adorable Housing Paper: The Informational Content of Agent Remarks."

Yet the research found that almost 40 percent of homes described as "adorable" also were characterized as "large," the latter of which was found to reduce its value by $2,601.79.

Adorable still increased by 5 percent the chance a house would sell, according to the study. The use of awesome raised it 1.02 percent and gorgeous, 1.44 percent.

'Historic' adds 18 days on market

The research found that though historic and luxurious were typically considered attractive descriptors, they seemed to have a harder time selling.

It took "historic" homes about 18 days longer to get off the market, and eight extra days for homes touted as "luxurious."

"It's not unique to Charlotte, the quantitative numbers that you see," Swidler said, adding that he and his colleagues studied the market in Charlotte after a real estate association there offered them a trove of data, the largest to date for such a study. "They're obviously specific to our data set, but if we went to Philadelphia, for example, I'm pretty certain the kinds of words you saw in Charlotte are going to show in Philadelphia."

The descriptor of adorable, Swidler said, was a relatively infrequent term in property descriptions, appearing in just around 1 percent of entries in the Multiple Listing Service, an expansive real estate online search platform.

"It is relegated mostly to smaller-sized homes," he said. "If you were in a home that was 300,000 square feet or larger, it's unlikely that adorable would be used. The words that you use have to have real meaning. I don't think you can call a large house 'cute' or 'adorable.' It doesn't make sense."

> "It's not unique to Charlotte, the quantitative numbers that you see. They're obviously specific to our data set, but if we went to Philadelphia, for example, I'm pretty certain the kinds of words you saw in Charlotte are going to show in Philadelphia."

The use of investment, motivated, distressed and reduced would slash the value of a property anywhere from $20,000 to $60,000, according to the study. For listings that included the words motivated or reduced, it took about a respective 29 and 44 extra days to sell.

Homes described as "large" and "spacious" saw their property values fall by a respective $2,601.79 and $7,351.26, according to the study, which attributed the decrease to a buyer "believ(ing) the Realtor is trying to conceal the lack of space by claiming the house or a room show bigger than they are."

The team conducted the study around what it called the "hedonic modeling of house prices," or the analysis of factors that contribute to the price of a property, including square footage; the number of bedrooms and bathrooms; location; and the area's school district.

It did not indicate how important the description of a property was relative to other elements, such as photos of the house or the safety of the neighborhood.

"Using a superior data set with over 700,000 observations, we document the set of most frequently used descriptive terms and show that context is important," according to the study, which said the size of the data set offset the chance of coming to erroneous conclusions.

The data collected by the team spanned the 2008 financial crisis and crash of the real estate housing bubble. Swidler said he and his colleagues had not studied whether certain descriptive terms could have even marginally helped some houses sell.

"Would adorable have helped you during a real downturn?" he said. "The answer is I don't know, but maybe we should look at it."

The authors clarified that they did not conduct a "full-blown textual analysis that examines readability of sentiment or structure," calling it "likely excessive."

The power of punctuation!

"MLS property descriptions tend to be relatively short (250 words or fewer) and frequently informal," according to the study. "They may contain abbreviations (e.g., "SS appl" for stainless steel appliances)."

Even punctuation could prove fruitful!!

"One exclamation mark appears to generate extra excitement about the property and raise its value $6,649.62," according to the study. "However, two exclamation marks raise the home's value $4,295.19 and the more exclamation marks used, the less the added value."

An overzealous real estate agent prone to "overuse (abuse) of exclamation marks" need not worry, the study said, finding that excessive punctuation – as many as five exclamation points – "has virtually no effect on buyer enthusiasm for the property."

As she sells houses, Hurtado is careful with her use of punctuation. Just one exclamation point is sufficient, she said, "if it's something really amazing."

"Use nice words," she said. "Use powerful, selling words. I think your words should be the exclamation point."

A quick lesson on smart toilet seats

Ed Del Grande
Ask the Plumber

Q I enjoy your plumbing column and have learned a lot. I've also seen how plumbing has gone high-tech with things like smart toilets.

But, now I am starting to hear about smart toilet seats. What exactly is a smart toilet seat? – Bill, Rhode Island

A Smart toilets have become popular with features like built-in music and automatic flushing. But they do have one area of concern.

Usually, they are pricey plumbing fixtures that can be expensive to install. So to make it easier on your wallet, high-tech toilet seats are now available and made to fit most elongated toilets.

Believe it or not, some smart toilet seat features include: seat-warming settings, personal washing and drying, LED lighting, slow-closing lids, an odor control system and even a remote control.

Finally, even though the seats do require a power source, they can still be an intelligent alternative to a smart toilet.

Q I read an article of yours that talked about adding a filter system to the kitchen sink. In my master bathroom I often think about filtering my bathroom sink water.

What types of filters can work best for this application? – Katie, South Carolina

First, see if a whole house filter system can be installed. Whole house filters are usually installed inside the home on the main water supply line feeding the plumbing fixtures. With this option, multiple plumbing fixtures like the kitchen faucet, bathroom faucet and even the shower valve can tap off the same filter system.

Husband thinks charging phone drains car battery

DEAR CAR TALK: My wife has a 2010 Chevy Suburban that I had to replace the battery in recently. The old battery was only four and a half years old.

I suspect the cause of the battery's premature demise was because she leaves her phone charging cable plugged in to the power port continuously.

I see that the tiny power light to the cable stays on even with the ignition off and the key removed.

Could that small power demand weaken the battery even though the vehicle is driven daily? She says that's bunk. What do you say? – Jerry

DEAR JERRY: We're with her.

Ray Magliozzi
Car Talk

You bought this Suburban in 2010, so I'm guessing you're now replacing your second battery. In other words, you're right on schedule.

And the phone charger is irrelevant.

First of all, a phone charger that plugs into a power port typically draws about one amp. And it'll only draw that one amp if there's a phone that's actively being charged. Otherwise, all it's drawing is enough power to light up that tiny green LED that tells you it's plugged in. That takes a fraction of an amp.

To give you some perspective on how much power she's using with her unused charger, it'd be the equivalent of pulling over once a day and leaving the emergency flashers on for 10 seconds.

It's almost nothing. It would be completely replenished once the car is started again, and it would have a negligible effect on the life of the battery.

Now, you haven't actually accused your wife of shortening the life of her battery with this phone charger, have you? I mean, out loud?

Oh, you have? That's too bad.

Well, you owe her an apology, then. Put your tail between your legs, tell her you were completely wrong, that she did nothing to wear out the battery, and start looking for some gourmet recipes you can cook for her in the next few weeks.

And here's a tip: Don't tell her she needs to extinguish the pilot light because it's wearing out the stove prematurely.

DEAR CAR TALK: I'm a 70-year-old woman with a 2016 BMW 228i xDrive coupe, base model. The current tires are the Continental run flats that came with the car.

After 28,000 miles, the front tires are bald. The rears still have some tread, but I need to replace the tires and have a few questions.

How do I determine if I have "staggered" tires or not? I assume not, but the guy at the tire store asked.

I've always liked Michelins, and they have both Y-rated tires and V-rated tires. Which do I need?

Do you still recommend rotating the tires? Some places will do it for free if I go back there regularly. Only front to back, or cross them in an X pattern?

Sorry for so many questions! I'm grateful for your reply. – Caren

DEAR CAREN: I'm tempted to do what my kids do to me. When I text them a series of questions, they just answer the last one and pretend they never saw the others.

First of all, you're right that you need four new tires. You have an all-wheel drive car, and in order to avoid doing harm to your center differential, you need four tires that are all the same diameter. Worn-out tires will have a smaller diameter. So you need four new ones now.

How do you know if you have staggered tires? The easiest way is to look at them. On the sidewall, you'll see the tire's measurements. The number to look for is the tire's width. That's a number given in millimeters like "195" or "225" and you'll find it inside a string that looks something like "P225/55R18."

If your rear tires are wider than your front tires, your tires are considered staggered, and you'll need to buy two wider tires for the rear wheels. But you don't have staggered tires (we looked it up) on your base model 228i.

The letter (Y, V, etc.) is the tire's speed rating. And unless you're a closet Lightning McQueen, you don't need to spring for Y- or V-rated tires. Y-rated tires are good up to speeds of 186 mph. V-rated tires are good up to 149 mph.

While there's no harm in having tires that are rated for a much higher speed than you'll ever drive, you'll pay extra for those exotic tires. An H-rated tire (130 mph) will be more than adequate for your purposes.

And if you like Michelins, they make very good tires, in our opinion. But you can buy anything that's the same size as the tires you're replacing.

Do a little research, though. Check Consumer Reports or Tire Rack and find yourself a highly rated tire in your size rather than just accepting whatever the local tire shop has lying around.

Once you get your new tires, we do recommend rotating them. Especially if it's free!

Your current front tires wore out faster than your rear tires. That's typically what happens because front tires do most of the braking and all of the steering. But because you have all-wheel drive, you now have to buy four new tires even though only two of your tires are completely shot.

If you rotate your next set back to front every 5,000 or 7,500 miles, they'll wear out more evenly, and the whole set will last a little longer. And as long as they're not staggered, you can move them front to back or crisscross them. Let the spirit move you.

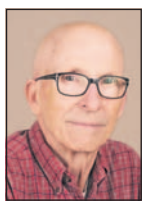
The 1981 DeLorean was a stunning looking sports car when it was introduced. High price, anemic performance, delayed introduction and other issues cost the fledgling automaker sales and founder John Z. DeLorean had to file for bankruptcy in December 1982. In all approximately 9,000 DeLoreans were built, with one appearing in a very popular blockbuster movie in 1985 with Marty McFly.

Back to the future with the DeLorean

When the subject of independent U.S. automakers from the past comes up in a discussion, I'm guessing that most people, especially those over 50 years old, can name several that come to mind. They've been gone for a long time but departed brands like Studebaker, Nash, Hudson and Packard would surely be recalled by many. More likely smaller automakers like Fraser, Bricklin and maybe Kaiser might be forgotten by now. There is one independent brand, however, that fell off the cliff way back in late 1982, but I'm willing to bet that a very high percentage of Americans are familiar with the never-say-die DeLorean.

Dar Davis



Like few other departed auto brands in our history, the memory of the DeLorean has not faded away but has actually grown exponentially. We have Marty McFly and Doc Brown to thank for that. Only three years following the demise of the DeLorean Motor Company the movie "Back to the Future," featuring Michael J. Fox as Marty McFly and Christopher Lloyd as "Doc" Brown, arrived in theaters. It was 1985's blockbuster movie and besides Mr. Fox and Mr. Lloyd, the third major figure in the movie was a car ... a very special car in a sci-fi get-up with gull-wing doors and all kinds of futuristic enhancements attached. The car was, of course, the DeLorean. Fox's Marty character, as well as the DeLorean automobile, would become part of Hollywood lore and inspire in the decades to follow two sequels, in 1989 and 1990, an animated series, a theme park ride, several video games, some comic books and a stage musical. Happily for those who are DeLorean fans, and I'm one of them, it appears that the time is not that far off when a brand-new, modern DeLorean may be available to purchase. Here's the story.

The story of DeLorean Motor Company's resurrection may remind many of the nearby Avanti story in South Bend. Both the DeLorean and Avanti were stunning looking sports cars that failed initially in the marketplace, but later efforts were successful in reviving them. Shown is the DeLorean operation facility in Humble, Texas, located near Houston. One or two new DeLoreans a year will be assembled at the facility once the regulations for the federally approved Low Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Act are approved by NHTSA.

Actually, the full DeLorean story is a long one. In today's column I only have space to comment on a venture now located in Texas that has exciting plans to bring a newly built DeLorean back to limited production. A quick refresher course on the DeLorean history goes something like this (very abridged). John Z. DeLorean made his mark in the auto industry back in the 1960s and 1970s. He first worked for Packard, then moved to the Pontiac Division in the mid-50s when Packard fell apart. He rose rapidly through the ranks at GM, first as an engineer for Pontiac (he is given a lot of credit for jump-starting the muscle car-era by pushing for the GTO in 1964), then as Pontiac Division general manager, next as Chevrolet general manager, and finally as GM vice president of car and truck production. John was not a typical, straight-lace corporate man. He was a handsome dude, dressed in fine expensive Italian suits and dated Hollywood starlets. He quickly became bored on the 16th executive floor at GM headquarters and quit in 1975. Soon after he announced plans to form the Delorean Motor Company (DMC). With financial assistance from the UK government he put together a deal to build a greenfield factory in Ireland and in January 1981 the first of his Giorgetto Giugiaro-designed stainless steel sports car was built. Underpowered and too expensive, the great looking car sold poorly and after only 9,000 units built, the last DeLorean assembled in Ireland was assembled in December 1982. Oh, I should mention that in an effort to raise badly needed cash for his company, John Z. was busted for selling drugs. A good lawyer got him off the hook but lawsuits that followed the filing for bankruptcy would play out for years. While the DeLorean sports car was not a sales success, it did have its followers and here's the rest of story and it goes like this.

As is often the case, this is a greatly condensed review of a rather long, complicated journey from the days in 1982 when John DeLorean's car company declared bankruptcy and in disarray to where it is today. The present-day DeLorean Motor Company was founded 15 years ago in 1995 by Liverpool-born mechanic Stephen Wynne after he successfully acquired the remaining DeLorean parts inventory and the "DMC" logo trademark of the DeLorean Motor Company. In the 80s Wynne operated an independent auto service facility in Los Angeles that specialized in English and French cars. Some Southern California owners of the approximately 9,000 DeLoreans built soon discovered that Wynne's auto service operation was the place to take their now-orphaned DeLoreans with a Renault-built engine for repairs and service.

It was in 1985 that Wynne formed a partnership with a Southern California DeLorean owner who had had the foresight to canvas the original DeLorean dealer body in the U.S. immediately following the automaker's bankruptcy and purchased their remaining stock of parts and tools. During the process of selling items to other DeLorean owners, this entrepreneur became acquainted with Wynne and in 1985 they together created a company named DeLorean One, a mail-order and full-service operation devoted to the DeLorean. Its success led to a second service site located in Humble, Texas (near Houston). Wynne relocated from California to Texas to oversee this operation. In 1995 the DeLorean One partnership was dissolved due to differing viewpoints. Wynne retained the Humble location, renaming it "DeLorean Motor Company."

The Humble facility is a 40,000 square foot purpose-built parts warehouse, showroom, offices and service/restoration center. Up to three quarters of the center's space is used to store NOS (new old stock) parts, OEM (original equipment manufacturer) parts and reproduction parts. Of note, since 1995, more than 250 reproduction parts have been introduced including windshields, power window regulators, interior trim and much more.

The DMC Humble center is a one-stop enterprise for present and future DeLorean owners. It has technicians on staff to provide service and do restoration work. Presently the company sells both consigned cars offered for sale by owners or cars that have been purchased by the DMC from individuals and resold. In either case, each car is completely serviced by the staff using NOS, OEM and reproduction parts. Since the late '90s, over 300 pre-owned DeLoreans have been sold.

Wynne and his company would like to begin assembling DeLoreans using a mix of NOS and brand-new parts. There is a major hitch. In December 2015 Congress passed the "Low Volume Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Act (H.R.2675). This law was created so that there was reasonable regulatory structure allowing small companies to produce a limited number of completed replica motor vehicles. However, delays in issuing guidance documents by federal agencies like the EPA and NHTSA have prevented the small automaker like DMC to do what they want to do – that is build cars in small numbers for a waiting public. Officials from DMC are hopeful that final rules will be released by late 2020, four years later than legislatively mandated, and then the "new" DeLorean can be ordered. By the way, DMC will be installing in the DeLorean not the original 130-hp Peugeot-Renault-Volvo 2.9-lter V-6 engine, but rather a modern high horsepower V-8 (motor yet to be determined) with numbers that meet the required U.S. emission standards.

The Low Volume Manufacturers law permits 325 cars per year to be sold. DMC has plans to build perhaps one or two per week. However, orders are not being taken at this time until the feds finish their responsibilities and issue guidelines. The DeLorean story is long and convoluted but really, really interesting. Those familiar with the resurrection of the Studebaker Avanti in the mid-1960s will see similar parallels in the story line. Those curious to learn more about the DeLorean can visit www.delorean.com, or just Google DeLorean Motor Company and all kinds of interesting stories pop up.

Trivia question

How many exterior colors were initially offered on the DeLorean?

■ Trivia Answer: None. Its exterior had a stainless steel skin. Not surprising a criticism from owners was a continual problem with finger prints on the car.

HOROSCOPE

BY EUGENIA LAST

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 9

Aim to turn your ideas into lucrative affairs this year. Attitude is everything. Project an outgoing and eager-to-please persona and execute your plans with precision and an eye on the clock. Personal improvement, love and happiness look promising.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Social events will promote love and romance. Get involved in sports or activities that include movement and dexterity. Investments should include art purchases as well as personal development.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) How you spend your time will determine what you get in return. Volunteering will bring satisfaction, and adding to your qualifications will result in a higher income. Mix business with pleasure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Take a hard look at your investments. Look for ways to broaden your scope, understanding and connections. Do something physical and energizing. Romance is encouraged.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Home improvements will pay off. Expect to face opposition or an emotional setback if you are impulsive or act on an assumption rather than on fact. Choose quality over quantity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Get together with people who put a smile on your face. Live in the moment and enjoy what life has to offer. Share your intentions with someone special.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Stick to a budget and avoid undue stress. Keep situations in perspective and don't overreact or put a close relationship in jeopardy. Take better care of your physical and emotional well-being.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Plan a fun-filled day with the people who bring out the best in you. Avoid complaints by living up to your promises and responsibilities. Pay attention to your loved ones and family.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Don't let anger get the better of you. Avoid debates or no-win situations and focus on what's doable. Listen to your intuition and stick to what you know and do best.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Join humanitarian groups. If you offer your time and services, not your cash, you will get more in return than you expected. Actions speak louder than words. Romance is featured.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Refuse to let your emotions get the better of you. Jealousy will not be becoming and will cause trouble. Rewards for your ability to remain calm and fair will improve your day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Travel, adventure and excitement will be your preferred pursuits. Get involved in enjoyable physical activities. Personal improvements are favored, and love is in the stars. Play to win.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Disagreements are likely if you aren't willing to listen to other points of view. Do your best to get along if you want others to hear what you have to say.

Bob Weber Jr.'s SLYLOCK FOX and COMICS FOR KIDS

Slylock Fox and Max Mouse succumbed to Count Weirdly's sleeping spray potion. As the duo dozed, Weirdly dropped them into his castle's virtual reality chamber. He wanted them to believe they have been transported to Egypt. But when Slylock awoke, he was not fooled. How did he know they were not in Egypt?

Solution -- Weirdly incorrectly programmed a saguaro cactus into the scene. Slylock knows this cactus is found exclusively in the Sonoran Desert of southern Arizona and Sonara, Mexico.

BOB WEBER JR and SR 2-9
